FRET. (1) To lament, or grieve. Var. dial.

(2) A narrow strait of the sea.

(3) To ferment, as cider. West.

(4) To adorn. (A.-S.) The term fret is often found in early writers applied to ornamental work of various kinds and in many different senses, but generally to any work that roughens the surface. The "fret of gold" in Chaucer is a kind of cap made like network, and anything of the kind was said to be fretted when the gems were placed crosswise in alternate directions, or interlaced. A fret of pearls, i. e. a coronet, Test. Vetust. p. 135. A frilled shirt was said to be fretted. A pair of boots, temp. John, are described as being ornamented with circles of fretwork, meaning probably embroidered with circles intersecting each other. See Strutt, ii. 48. In architecture it was applied to embossed work or minute carving. Oxf. Gloss. Arch. p. 175. Kennett has, "frett-work, the more curious way of plaistering a roof or ceiling."

FRITH. A hedge, or coppice. See Will. and the Werwolf, p. 30. "Also there is difference between the fryth and the fell; the fels are understood the mountains, vallyes, and pastures with corne, and such like; the frythes betoken the springs and coppyses," Noble Art of Venerie. 1611, p. 98. Drayton explains it "a high wood," a sense it seems to bear in Ywaine and Gawin, 157, 1688; Minot, p. 9; Sir Amadas, 546; Cov. Myst. p. 264; Piers Ploughman, pp. 224, 241, 355; Const. Mas. 6, 266; Anturs of Arther, i. 8, iv. 10. A distinction between frith and wood seems to be made in Will. and the Werwolf, p. 80, "out of forest and frithes and alle faire wodes." Some writers explain it to mean "all hedgewood except thorns," a sense still used in the provinces; and it occurs in the local glossaries with the following meanings,—unused pasture land; a field taken from a wood; young underwood; brushwood. Many woods in Kent are still called friths. Frythed, wooded, Piers Ploughman, p. 112. "Frith, to plash a hedge. Devon." Dean Milles MS.

> The steward sir Gaymere,
> And mony gud sqwyere,
> Thay broght hame on bere

(3) A turkey-cock. Var. dial.

GOBBLE-GUT. A greedy fellow. Linc.

GOBBLER. A turkey-cock. Suffolk.

GOBBON. Same as Gob (1).

GO-BET. A hunting phrase, equivalent to go along. See Bet (8). Our second extract curiously illustrates a passage in Chaucer, Leg. Dido, 288.

Go bet, Wat, with Crystes curse!
The next tyme thou shal be take;
I have a hare pype in my purse,
That shall be set, Watte, for thi sake
MS. Cantab. Ff. v. 48, f. 110.

Old Father of the Pye,
I cannot sing, my lips are dry!
But when my lips are very well wet,
Then I can sing with the, Heigh, go bet!

GOBSTICK. A spoon. North.

GOB-THRUST. A stupid fellow. North.

GO-BY. To give one the go-by, i. e. to deceive him, or to leave him in the lurch; to overpass. The second turn a hare made in coursing was called her go-by. Our old dramatists often ridicule a phrase introduced by Kyd in his Spanish Tragedy, ap. Dodsley, iii. 163, "Go by, Hieronimo," which even seems to have become proverbial.

GO-BY-THE-GROUND. A diminutive person. East. The ground ivy is called Gill-go-by-the-ground in the provinces.

GOCHE. A pot, or pitcher. Wilts.

GOCKEN. To be ravenous. Linc.

GOD. God before, or God to-forne, God going before and assisting. God to friend, God being protector.

GOD-ALMIGHTY'S-COW. The lady-bird.

GOD-CAKE. A particular description of cake which it is customary on New Year's Day for sponsors to send to their godchildren at Coventry; a practice which appears to be peculiar to that city.

GODCEPT. A godfather. This occurs in Holinshed, Chron. Ireland, p. 78.

GODDARD. (1) A fool. North.

(2) A kind of cup or goblet. "A woodden goddet or tankard," Florio, p. 80.

> MS. Cantab. Ff. v. 48, f. 51.

GODDERHELE. Better health! Goderhaylle, Towneley Mysteries, p. 89.

GODDOT. An oath which occurs frequently in Havelok. The editor is clearly right in considering it a corruption of God wot, so many oaths being amalgamised in a similar manner. In the notes to Pr. Parv. p. 201, it is confused with God-ȝate, or God-wolde, which are evidently of a different origin. I have purposely omitted a host of oaths of this description, as they are for the most part easy of solution, and in any case are not of sufficient worth to balance their impiety.

GODE. Wealth; goods. (A.-S.) Still retained in Cheshire. Wilbraham, p. 43.

GODELE. Goodly. Emaré, 503.

> Feyre and longe was he thore,
> A godelyur man was none bore.

GOD-ILD-YOU. A corruption of God yield you, i. e. reward or bless you.

GODLEC. Goodness. Wright's Anec. Lit. p. 8.

GODLYCHE. Goodly; politely. "Godlyche he hyr gret," Degrevant, 675.

GODNEDAY. Good-day. Ritson.

GOD-PAYS. A profane expression formerly used by disbanded soldiers, implying that they had no money themselves, and must therefore borrow or beg. Hence God-to-pay, a hopeless debt, nothing. See Ben Jonson, viii. 60, 158.

GODPHERE. A godfather. Jonson.

GOD'S-BLESSING. To go out of God's blessing into the warm sun, a proverbial phrase for quitting a better for a worse situation. See Nares and Ray.

GODSEND. Any good fortune quite unexpected. On the coast a wreck is sometimes so called. Var. dial.

GOD'S-GOOD. Yeast. Var. dial. See Lilly, ed. 1632, sig. Aa vii; Florio, p. 130. It is spelt gosgood in some provincial glossaries. Forby is clearly wrong in his explanation, as the references to Lilly and Florio indisputably show.

GODSHARLD. God forbid! Yorksh.

GODSIB. A godfather. Chaucer.

GODSPEED. An exclamation addressed to a person commencing a journey, implying the speaker's anxiety for his speedy and safe transit. Still in use.

GOD'S-PENNY. Earnest-money. North. "A God's-pennie, an earnest-pennie," Florio, p. 39.

GOD'S-SAKE. A child kept for God's sake, i. e. a foster-child. See Nomenclator, p. 20; Florio, p. 22.

GOISTER. To laugh loudly. Linc. Also, to brag; to enter into a frolic.

GOJONE. The gudgeon of a wheel; also, the fish so called. Pr. Parv.

GOKE. A fool. Reliq. Antiq. i. 291. Ben Jonson has gokt, stupefied. Goky, a gawky, a clown, Piers Ploughman, p. 220. "A goky, a gokin vel gakin, stultus," Milles MS.

GOKERT. Awkward; clumsy. Var. dial.

GOLD. The plant turnsol. It is also applied to corn-marygold and wild myrtle.

> That she sponge up out of the molde
> Into a floure was named golde.
> Gower, ed. 1554, f. 120.

GOLD-CRAP. The herb crow-foot. See Hollyband's Dictionarie, 1593, in v. Bassinets. Called also gold-cup.

GOLD-FINDER. An old jocular name for a person who cleaned a jakes.

GOLDFLOWER. Golden cudweed; the aurelia, according to Florio, p. 166.

GOLDFRE. A welt of gold: explained aurifigium in Nominale MS.

GOLD-HEWEN. Of a golden colour. (A.-S.)

GOLD-HOUSE. A treasury.

> On the morowe, tho hyt was day,
> The kyng to hys golde-hows toke hys way.
> MS. Cantab. Ff. ii. 38, f. 133.

GOLDING. A marygold. Chesh.

GOLD-KNAP. The herb crow-foot. Huloet.

GOLD-NEPS. A kind of small red and yellow early ripe pear. Chesh.

GOLDSMITHRIE. Goldsmith's work. (A.-S.)

GOLDSPINK. The goldfinch. North.

GOLD-WEIGHT. To the gold-weight, i. e. to the minutest particulars, gold-weights being very exact. See Jonson, v. 360.

GOLDY. Of a gold colour.

GO-LESS. I cannot go less, i. e., I cannot accept of less, I cannot play for a smaller sum. "Goe lesse, at primero," Cotgrave, in v. Manque.

GOLET. The throat, or gullet. (A.-N.) A part of armour or dress which covered the throat was so called.

> Throwghe golet and gorgere he hurtez hym ewyne.
> Morte Arthure, MS. Lincoln, f. 72.
> Be the golett of the hode
> Johne pulled the munke downe.
> MS. Cantab. Ff. v. 48, f. 129.

GOLIARDS. The best account of the goliardi is given in Mr. Wright's preface to Walter Mapes, p. x. "They appear," says Mr. Wright, "to have been in the clerical order somewhat the same class as the jongleurs and minstrels among the laity, riotous and unthrifty scholars who attended on the tables of the richer ecclesiastics, and gained their living and clothing by practising the profession of buffoons and jesters. The name appears to have originated towards the end of the twelfth century; and, in the documents of that time, and of the next century, is always connected with the clerical order." In the Decretal. Bonifacii VIII. Univ. Oxon. they are thus mentioned, se joculatores seu goliardos faciunt aut buffones. See other quotations of a similar import in Ducange.

GO-LIE. To recline; to be laid by the wind; to subside. Somerset. Perf. went-lie; part. yone-lie.

GOLIONE. A kind of gown.

> And alle was do ryȝt as sche bad,
> He hath hire in his clothis clad,
> And caste on hire his golione,
> Whiche of the skyn of a lione
> Was made, as he upon the wey
> It slow; and over this to pleye
> Sche took his gret mace also,
> And knitte it at hire girdille tho.
> Gower, MS. Soc. Antiq. 134 f. 170.

GOLL. (1) A hand, or fist. East. "How cold they are, poor golls," Beaum. and Flet. i. 97. See Hawkins, iii. 119.

(2) To strike or blow with violence; to rush, as wind does. North.

(3) The gullet, Nominale MS. More properly the ball of the throat.

> Sethen he went to the skulle,
> And hewyd asonder the throte golle.
> MS. Cantab. Ff. ii. 38, f. 115.

GOLLAND. This plant is alluded to by Turner as the ranunculus or crowfoot, and Brockett mentions a yellow flower so called without giving its other name. It is probably that species which is described by Gerard, p. 810, as the double crowfoot or yellow batchelor's-buttons. "Goulands, Bor. corn-marigolds," Kennett, MS. Lansd. 1033.

GOLLAR. To shout; to snarl. North.

(3) A clownish fellow. Somerset.

GORBELLY. A person with a large belly. Devon. See Hollyband, 1593, in v. Bredallier; 1 Henry IV. ii. 2.

GORBIT. Same as Gor (2). Yorksh.

GORBLE. To eat, or gobble. North.

GORCE. A wear. Blount, in v.

GORCHANDE. Grumbling. R. de Brunne

GORCOCK. The red grouse. North.

GORCROW. A carrion-crow. Pennant. This bird is mentioned by Ben Jonson.

GORD. A narrow stream of water. See Kennett's Gloss. p. 80. "A whirlpool, or deep hole in a river," Blount's Gloss. ed. 1681, p. 290.

GORDE. (1) Girded on. Meyrick, i. 177.

(2) To strike, or spur. Gawayne.

GORE. (1) Mud; dirt. Lybeaus Disconus, 1471. Still in use in Norfolk.

(2) A-gore, bloody. See Moor's Suffolk Words, p. 154, and Agore, p. 32.

(3) The lowest part in a tract of country. North. It is explained by Kennett, a small narrow slip of ground, Gloss. p. 80.

(4) A piece of cloth inserted. This is the explanation in the Craven Gloss. i. 192, and it may be more fully described as a diagonal seam inserted at the bottom of a shift, shirt robe or gown, to give breadth to the lower part of it. Florio has, "Gheroni, the gores or gussets of a shirt or smock." See Chaucer, Cant. T. 3237. It is often used by very early writers in the phrase under gore, i. e. under the clothing. This explains a disputed passage in Sir Thopas. "Gouthlich under gore," MS. Digby 86. "Glad under gore," Wright's Lyric Poetry, p. 26. See also Wright's Pol. Songs, p. 152. Gore-coat, a gown or petticoat gored, or so cut as to be broad at the bottom, and narrower at the upper part, Exmoor Scolding, p. 39.

(5) To make up a mow of hay. Linc.

GORE-BLOOD. Clotted blood. Shak. We have gorwoundede in Reliq. Antiq. i. 55.

GORELL. A great clownish lad.

> Glotony that gorell is the vjte. synne,
> That men use of in delicat fedyng of mete.
> MS Laud. 416. f. 98.

GORGAYSE. A woman's tucker. Skelton, ii. 391.

GORGE. The throat; the mouth. (A.-N.) A hawk when full-fed was said to bear full gorge. To give over the gorge, i. e. to be sick.

GORGEAUNT. A boar in the second year. An old hunting term.

GOSTER. Same as Gauster, q. v.

GOTCH. A large pitcher. Var. dial. Gotch-belly, a large round belly.

GOTE. A ditch, or sluice. North.

> There arose a great controversie about the erecting of two new gotes at Skirbek and Langare for drayning the waters out of South Holand and the Fens. Dugdale's Imbanking, 1662, p. 243.

GOTER. A shower. Also, a gutter.

> He sal com doun als rain in flees soft,
> And goters droppand over erthe oft.
> MS. Egerton 614, f. 48.
> Bankes flowen of floode abowte in the vale,
> And out of the gaye golde goters ther ȝode.
> MS. Cott. Calig. A. ii. f. 14.

GOTFER. An old man. Wilts.

GOTHAM. A wise man of Gotham, i. e. a fool. It is scarcely necessary to allude to the well-known collection of tales of the wise men of Gotham, repr. 1840. Gotham is also a cant term for Newcastle.

GOTHELEN. To grumble, or rumble, as the stomach does. (A.-S.)

GOTHERLY. Kind; sociable. North.

GOTHSEMAY. Gossamer. Lady Al. 1659.

GO-TO. Don't go to, not able to. Var. dial. The phrase go to, in old colloquial language, and often introduced in old plays, has not, I believe, been properly explained. It is equivalent to, well, well now, well then, or go on; and it occurs in the French Alphabet, 8vo. Lond. 1615, as the translation of or sus. Florio has, "Hór béne, well, go too, it is well now."

GO-TO-BED-AT-NOON. Goat's beard.

GOTOURS. Lumps; impurities?

> Tak the rutes of morelle and wasche thame and stamp thame wele, and lay thame to the fester at morne and at evene, and ever clence it wele of gotours, and wasche it with hate wyne.
> MS. Linc. Med. f. 313.

GOTTED. Gotten. Skelton.

GOTY. A pitcher, or gotch, q. v.

GOUD-SPINK. A goldfinch. Craven.

GOUL. (1) The gum of the eye. North. See Cotton's Works, 1734, p. 125. "A blemish or waterish matter in sore eyes called of some gowle," Florio, p. 104.

(2) A hut, or cottage. Cumb.

GOULFE. A goaf of corn. Palsgrave.

GOUND. A yellow secretion in the corners of the eyes. North. Left unexplained in Arch. xxx. 408. "Gownde of the eye," Pr. Parv. "Gound, sordes oculorum condensatæ per totum agrum Linc. vulgatissime appellantur," Skinner. In MS. Med. Linc. f. 283 is a receipt "for blered eghne and gundy;" and gunny eyes are explained sore running eyes in the Yorkshire Dialogue, 1697, p. 100. The gound is well explained by Milles to be oculorum gramia quæ ab oculis distillat, and if the old text in the passage in Timon of A., i. 1, "Our Poesie is as a Gowne," ed. 1623, p. 80, is in any way correct, we have in this word gound, or gownde, as it is spelt in Pr. Parv. p. 206, the genuine old reading, which Tieck tries to make sense of in a different manner. The distillat of Milles answers to the uses or oozes of Shakespeare.

> Right so pleynly thorowe the goundy sight
> Of erytikes, ne may not susteyne
> For to beholde the clerenesse of this quene.
> Lydgate, MS. Ashmole 39, f. 36.

GOURY. Dull; stupid-looking. North.

GOUSH. A stream. Also, to make a noise, as water when gushing out.

GOUT. The gateway bridge over a watercourse; a drain. Warw.

GOUTHLICH. Goodly. (A.-S.)

> Wis he wes of lore,
> And gouthlich under gore. Wright's Anecd. Lit. p. 2.

GOUTOUS. Rich; delicate, especially applied to made dishes. Ord. and Reg. p. 473. "Luk ay that he ette no gowttous mette," MS. Med. Linc. f. 310. So called probably on account of rich meats causing that disease. "Gotows mann or womanne, guttosus," Pr. Parv. p. 206. Guttosus in Med. Lat. corresponds to arthriticus.

GOUTS. (1) Drops. Macbeth, ii. 1. There is no doubt of the correctness of this explanation. Gowtyth for droppeth occurs in an early English MS. mentioned in Arch. xxx. 408.

(2) The spots on a hawk, an ancient term in falconry. See Dict. Rust. in v.

GOVE. (1) To stare vacantly. North.

> For unnethes es a chylde borne fully,
> That it ne begynnes to gowle and crye.
> Hampole, MS Bowes, p. 25

GOWLED. Gummed up. See Goul (1).

GOWLES. Gules. Reliq. Antiq. i. 324.

> The crest that on his helme es,
> Es a lady of gowlis in hir reches.
> MS. Lincoln A. 1. 17, f. 141.
> A lyone tyed till an ake
> Of gowlys and grene. MS. Ibid. f. 134.

GOZZARD. A fool. Linc.

GRAAL. A large dish, a large hollow basin, fit for serving up meat. The St. Graal was the vessel in which our Saviour ate the last sup per with his apostles, and is fabled to have been preserved by Joseph of Arimathea. Various miracles are said to have been performed by means of this dish, and it is a frequent subject of allusion in some of the old romances, as an object in search of which numerous knights-errants spent their lives. See further in Roquefort.

GRAB. To seize, or snatch; to steal. Also, a snap or bite. Var. dial.

GRABBLE. To grapple. Devon. "To grabble or grope a wench," Miege.

GRABBY. Grimy; filthy. Kent.

GRAB-STOCK. A young crab-tree, or the cutting of one. Dorset.

GRACE. Harde grace, misfortune.

GRACE-CUP. A large cup in a monastery or college, passed round the table after grace was said. See Davies' Ancient Rites, 1672, p. 126.

GRACE-OF-GOD. The plant hartshorn. See Topsell's Foure-footed Beasts, p. 126.

HANDECHAMP. A ruffle. Craven.

HANDELL. A fuller's instrument. Pegge.

HANDER. The second to a pugilist. Linc.

HANDERHAMP. A ruffle. Craven.

HANDERSOME. Handy; meddling. North.

HANDEWARPS. A kind of cloth, formerly much made in Essex.

HANDFAST. Hold; custody; confinement. Also, connection or union with. See Holinshed, Chron. Ireland, pp. 6, 134. The custom of handfasting, or contracting for marriage, needs no more than a passing observation.

HANDFUL. The measure of a hand, or four inches; a span. Blount.

HANDGUN. A culverin. Palsgrave.

HAND-HOVEN-BREAD. Oatmeal-bread, kneaded very stiff, with little leaven. Lanc.

HANDICAP. A kind of game, mentioned in Pepys's Diary.

HAND-IN-AND-HAND-OUT. A game played in the following manner. A company of young people are drawn up in a circle, when one of them, pitched upon by lot, walks round the band, and, if a boy, hits a girl, or if a girl, she strikes a boy whom she chooses, on which the party striking and the party struck run in pursuit of each other, till the latter is caught, whose lot it then becomes to perform the same part. A game so called was forbidden by statute of Edw. IV.

HAND-IN-POST. A guide-post. Oxon.

HANDLASS. A small windlass; the handle of a windlass. West.

HAND-LIME. A ciron, or hand-worm.

HANDLOCKED. Handcuffed. Dekker.

HAND-OUT. A kind of game mentioned by Sir John Harrington.

HAND-OVER-HEAD. Thoughtlessly extravagant; careless; at random; plenty. Hemp is said to be dressed hand over head, when the coarse part is not separated from the fine.

HANDPAT. Fluent. See Antpat.

HAND-RUFF. A shirt ruffle. Hall.

HANDRUNNING. Continuously. North.

HANDSMOOTH. Quite flat. Forby explains it, uninterruptedly, without obstacle, entirely. It occurs in Palsgrave.

HANDYCUFFS. Blows. See Yorkshire Ale, p. 10; Florio, p. 20. Handy-blows, Spanish Tragedy, ap. Hawkins, ii. 9.

HANDY-DANDY. A game thus played by two children. One puts something secretly, as a small pebble, into one hand, and with clenched fists he whirls his hands round each other, crying, "Handy-spandy, Jack-a-dandy, which good hand will you have?" The other guesses or touches one; if right, he wins its contents; if wrong, loses an equivalent. This game is not obsolete, and is mentioned in Piers Ploughman, p. 69; King Lear, iv. 6; Florio, p. 57. "The play called handie dandie, or the casting or pitching of the barre," Nomenclator, p. 297, which seems to refer to another amusement.

HANDYGRIPES. "Alle strétte, at grapling or handygripes," Florio, ed. 1611, p. 20.

HANE. (1) To throw. Devon.

(2) Protection; safeguard. Linc.

HANG. (1) A crop of fruit. East.

(2) A declivity. East. To hang out, to lean over as a cliff does.

(3) To stick, or adhere. West. Also, to tie or fasten. Somerset.

(4) It's hang it that has it, there is little or no difference. To hang out, to give a party. To hang an arse, to hang back or hesitate. The last phrase occurs in Hudibras. To hang the lip, to pout, to look sullen. To hang in the bell-ropes, to be asked in church and then defer the marriage. To hang in one's hair, to scold or abuse.

HANGBY. A hanger-on; a dependent.

HANS. Quantity; multitude. Hall.

HANSE. (1) The upper part of a door frame. "Antlantes, ymages of antique sette over doores in the corners of an haunce," Elyot, 1559. "The haunse, or lintell of a doore," Cotgrave, in v. Claveau; "the haunse of a dore, un dessus de porte." Florio, p. 507, apparently makes it synonymous with threshold, and early scientific writers use it occasionally for the spring of an arch.

(2) To enhance, exalt. Chester Plays, i. 168.

HANSEL. A gift, reward, or bribe. See Reynard the Foxe, p. 146; Depos. Ric. II. p. 30; Piers Ploughman, p. 96. It is a new year's gift, an earnest or earnest penny, any gift or purchase at a particular time or season; also, the first use of anything. The first money received in the morning for the sale of goods is the hansel, and it is accounted fortunate to be the purchaser. Hansel-Monday is the first Monday in the year, when it is usual to make presents to children and servants. "To hansel our sharp blades," to use them for the first time, Sir John Oldcastle, p. 29. In Beves of Hamtoun, p. 113, it means the first action. "In the way of good hansell, de bonne erre," Palsgrave. In the Vale of Blackmore, a present to a young woman at her wedding is called a good handsel. The first purchaser in a shop newly opened hansels it, as the first purchaser of the day does a market. "The first bridall banket after the wedding daye, the good handzell feast," Nomenclator, p. 80; "Gossips feasts, as they tearme them, good handsel feasts," Withals, ed. 1608, p. 291. "Handselled, that hath the handsell or first use of," Cotgrave, in v. Estreiné. "Haffe hansell for the mar," Robin Hood, i. 87. From the following very curious passage, it appears the writer disbelieved the common superstition respecting the good fortune of the hansel, or hancel.

> Of hancel y can no skylle also,
> Hyt ys nouȝt to beleve tharto;
> Me thynketh hyt ys fals every deyl,
> Y beleve hyt nouȝt, ne never shal weyl.
> For many havyn glad hancel at the morw,
> And to hem or evyn cometh mochyl sorw.
> MS. Harl. 1701, f. 3.
> Therfore thou haste feble hansell,
> And warse betyde the schall.
> MS. Cantab. Ff. ii. 38, f. 116.

HANSELINE. A kind of short jacket, mentioned by Chaucer.

HARBOROUS. Hospitable. Coverdale.

HARBORROW. Lodging; protection. Also, to lodge in an inn. Lydgate.

HARBOUR. The term applied to the lodgment of the hart or hind. See Twici, p. 27. The man who held the lymer was called the harbourer, and his business was to go out early in the morning on his ring-walks, and find by his hound where a hart or other beast had gone into the wood from his pasture. He then followed the scent till he thought he was near the lair, and having taken some of the freshest fewmets he could find, went to the place of meeting. This was called harbouring the hart. See also the Gent. Rec.

HARBROUGHE. Harbour; lodging. We have also harburgerye, and other forms.

HARBURGEN. See Habergeon.

HOBBY-HORSE. (1) The dragon-fly. Cumb.

(2) An important personage in the morris dance, obsolete for two centuries, although the dance is still practised. The hobby-horse consisted of a light frame of wicker-work, fastened to the body of the person who performed the character, whose legs were concealed by a housing, which, with a false head and neck, gave the appearance of a horse. Thus equipped, he performed all sorts of antics, imitating the movements of a horse, and executing juggling tricks of various kinds. A ladle was sometimes suspended from the horse's mouth for the purpose of collecting money from the spectators. To play the hobby-horse, i. e. to romp. In the following passage, the may-pole is supposed to be speaking:—

> The hobby-horse doth hither prance,
> Maid Marrian and the Morris dance,
> My summons fetcheth far and near
> All that can swagger, swil, and swear,
> All that can dance, and drab, and drink,
> They run to me as to a sink. MS. Harl. 1221.

HOBBY-HORSE-DANCE. "Bromley Pagets was remarkable for a very singular sport on New Year's Day and Twelfth Day, called the Hobby Horse Dance: a person rode upon the image of a horse, with a bow and arrow in his hands, with which he made a snapping noise, keeping time with the music, whilst six others danced the hay and other country dances, with as many rein-deer's heads on their shoulders. To this hobby-horse belonged a pot, which the reeves of the town kept and filled with cakes and ale, towards which the spectators contributed a penny, and with the remainder maintained their poor, and repaired the church," Mirror, xix. 228.

(8) The proverb alluded to in the following lines is constantly quoted by old writers.

> There is a proverbe, and a prayer withall,
> That we may not to three strange places fall;
> From Hull, from Hallifax, from Hell, 'tis thus,
> From all these three, Good Lord, deliver us.
> This praying proverb's meaning to set downe,
> Men doe not wish deliverance from the towne:
> The town's nam'd Kingston, Hul's the furious river,
> And from Hulls dangers, I say, Lord deliver!
> At Hallifax the law so sharpe doth deale,
> That whoso more then 13. pence doth steale,
> They have a jyn that wondrous quicke and well,
> Sends thieves all headlesse unto heav'n or hell
> From Hell each man sayes, Lord, deliver me, > Because from Hell can no Redemption be:
> Men may escape from Hull and Hallifax,
> But sure in Hell there is a heavier taxe.
> Let each one for themselves in this agree,
> And pray, From Hell, good Lord, deliver me!
> Taylor's Workes, 1630, ii. 12-13.

Taylor, the Water Poet, in the same tract, mentions Hull cheese. It is, he says, "much like a loafe out of a brewers basket; it is composed of two simples, mault and water, in one compound, and is cousin germane to the mightiest ale in England."

HUMMOCK. A mound of earth. West.

HUMOUROUS. Moist; humid. Also, capricious. Shak.

HUMOURS. Manners; qualities; oddities. The term was constantly used with various shades of sense in our early dramatists. A tipsy person was said to be in his humours. Ben Jonson has given a capital history of the word, which seems to have been imitated by the writer of the following epigram:

> Aske Humors what a feather he doth weare
> It is his humour (by the Lord) he'll sweare,
> Or what he doth with such a horse-taile locke,
> Or why upon a whore he spendes his stocke,—

He hath a humour doth determine so:
Why in the stop-throte fashion he doth goe,
With scarfe about his necke, hat without band,
It is his humour. Sweet sir, understand
What cause his purse is so extreame distrest
That oftentimes is scarcely penny-blest;
Only a humour If you question why
His tongue is ne'er unfurnish'd with a lye,—
It is his humour too he doth protest:
Or why with sergeants he is so opprest,
That like to ghosts they haunt him ev'rie day,
A rascal humour doth not love to pay.
Object why bootes and spurres are still in season,
His humour answers, humour is his reason.
If you perceive his wits in wetting shrunke,
It cometh of a humour to be drunke.
When you behold his lookes pale, thin, and poore,
The occasion is his humour and a whoore:
And every thing that he doth undertake,
It is a veine for senceless humour's sake.

Humor's Ordinarie, 1607.

HUNTING. Most of the principal old hunting terms will be found under their proper heads in the alphabetical order, but the following lists are here given for the use of those who are more especially interested in the subject, or who may have occasion to explain any early passages referring to this genuine old English sport. They are in some degree taken from Sir H. Dryden's edition of Twici, 4to. 1844, and most of the terms will also be found in Blome's Gentleman's Recreations. It should be recollected that in hunting, there is a peculiar phraseology adapted to each separate animal.

1. Ordure of Animals.

Hart and hind, fumes, fewmets, fewmishings. Hare, croteys, crotels, crotisings, buttons. Boar, freyn, fiants, lesses. Wolf, freyn, lesses, fiants, fuants. Buck and doe, cotying, fewmets, fewmishings. Fox, waggying, billetings, fiants, fuants. Marten, dirt, fiants, fuants. Roe-buck and doe, cotying, fewmets, fewmishings. Otter, spraits, spraints. Badger, werdrobe, fiants, fuants. Coney, crotels, croteys, crotisings. Twici applies the word fiants to the ordure of the boar, but the proper term in France is laissees, and in England lesses. The author of the Maystre of the Game applies cotying to the buck and roebuck, but no other writers do so.

2. Dislodgement, or starting.

Hart and hind, to unharbour. Hare, start, move. Boar, rear. Wolf, raise. Buck and doe, dislodge, rouse. Fox, find, unkennel. Marten, bay. Roe-buck and roe, find. Otter, vent. Badger, dig, find. Coney, boll.

HUNTING-THE-RAM. A custom formerly prevalent at Eton, but discontinued about the year 1747. It was usual for the butchers of the College to give on the election Saturday a ram to be hunted by the scholars. MS. Sloane 4839, f. 86.

HUNTING-THE-WREN. The custom still prevalent in Ireland, the Isle of Man, and some other places, on St. Stephen's Day, of hunting the wren, is one of very considerable antiquity. Its origin is only accounted for by tradition. Aubrey, having mentioned the last battle fought in the North of Ireland between the Protestants and the Papists, says:—"Near the same place a party of the Protestants had been surprised sleeping by the Popish Irish, were it not for several wrens that just wakened them by dancing and pecking on the drums as the enemy were approaching. For this reason the wild Irish mortally hate these birds to this day, calling them the devil's servants, and killing them wherever they can catch them; they teach their children to thrust them full of thorns; you'll see sometimes on holidays a whole parish running like madmen from hedge to hedge a wren-hunting." In the Isle of Man, on St. Stephen's Day, the children of the villagers procure a wren, attach it with a string to a branch of holly, decorate the branch with pieces of riband that they beg from the various houses, and carry it through the village, singing the following ridiculous lines:—

We'll hunt the wran, says Robin to Bobbin;
We'll hunt the wran, say Richard to Robin;
We'll hunt the wran, says Jack o' th' land;
We'll hunt the wran, says every one.

Where shall we find him? says Robin to Bobbin;
Where shall we find him? says Richard to Robin;
Where shall we find him? says Jack o' th' land,
Where shall we find him? says every one.

In yon green bush, says Robin to Bobbin;
In yon green bush, says Richard to Robin,
In yon green bush, says Jack o' th' land;
In yon green bush, says every one.

How shall we kill him? says Robin to Bobbin;
How shall we kill him? says Richard to Robin;
How shall we kill him? says Jack o' the land;
How shall we kill him? says every one.

With sticks and stones, says Robin to Bobbin;
With sticks and stones, says Richard to Robin;
With sticks and stones, says Jack o' th' land;
With sticks and stones, says every one.

How shall we get him home? says Robin to Bobbin;
How shall we get him home? says Richard to Robin;
How shall we get him home? says Jack o' th' land;
How shall we get him home? says every one.

We'll borrow a cart, says Robin to Bobbin;
We'll borrow a cart, says Richard to Robin;
We'll borrow a cart, says Jack o' th' land;
We'll borrow a cart, says every one.

How shall we boil him? says Robin to Bobbin;
How shall we boil him? says Richard to Robin;
How shall we boil him? says Jack o' th' land;
How shall we boil him? says every one.

In the brewery pan, says Robin to Bobbin;
In the brewery pan, says Richard to Robin;
In the brewery pan, says Jack o' th' land;
In the brewery pan, says every one.

HUNT'S-UP. A tune played on the horn under the windows of sportsmen very early in the morning, to awaken them. Hence the term was applied to any noise of an awakening or alarming nature. "A hunt is up or musike plaid under ones window in a morning," Florio, p. 304. "Resveil, a hunts-up, or morning song for a new-maried wife the day after the mariage," Cotgrave. "Hunsup, a clamour, a turbulent outcry," Craven Gl. One ballad of the hunt's-up commences with the following lines:—

The hunt is up, the hunt is up,
  And now it is almost day;
And he that's a-bed with another man's wife,
  It's time to get him away.

Mr. Black discovered a document in the Rolls-house, from which it appeared that a song of the Hunt's up was known as early as 1536, when information was sent to the council against one John Hogon, who, "with a crowd or a fyddyll," sung a song with some political allusions to that tune. Some of the words are given in the information:

The hunt is up, the hunt is up, &c.
The Masters of Árte and Doctours of Dyvynyté
Have brought this realme ought of good unyté.
Thre nobyll men have take this to stay,
My Lord of Norff. Lorde of Surrey,

IPOCRAS. (1) Hippocrates.

> And ynto preson put he was;
> And now begynneth the tale of Ipocras.
> MS. Cantab. Ff. ii. 38, f. 138.

(2) This beverage has been already mentioned, in v. Hippocras, but some further explanation may, perhaps, not be unacceptable. The manner of making it is thus described in a MS. of medical and other receipts—"To make ypocrasse for lords with gynger, synamon, and graynes, sugour, and turesoll: and for comyn pepull gynger canell, longe peper, and claryffyed hony. Loke ye have feyre pewter basens to kepe in your pouders and your ypocrasse to ren ynne, and to vj. basens ye muste have vj. renners on a perche, as ye may here see; and loke your poudurs and your gynger be redy and well paryd or hit be beton into poudur. Gynger colombyne is the best gynger; mayken and balandyne be not so good nor holsom. Now thou knowist the propertees of ypocras. Your poudurs must be made everyche by themselfe, and leid in a bledder in store, hange sure your perche with baggs, and that no bagge twoyche other, but basen twoyche basen. The fyrst bagge of a galon, every on of the other a potell. Fyrst do into a basen a galon or ij. of red wyne; then put in your pouders, and do it into the renners, and so into the seconde bagge. Then take a pece, and assay it; and yef hit be enythyng to stronge of gynger, alay it withe synamon; and yef it be strong of synamon, alay it withe sugour cute. And thus schall ye make perfyte ypocras. And loke your bagges be of boltell clothe, and the mouthes opyn, and let it ren in v. or vj. bagges on a perche, and under every bagge a clene basen. The draftes of the spies is good for sewies. Put your ypocrase into a stanche wessell, and bynde opon the mouthe a bleddur strongly; then serve forthe waffers and ypocrasse." This is printed in the Forme of Cury, p. 161, but I have had no opportunity of seeing the original manuscript, and I am afraid it has not been quite correctly copied in some few instances. Another receipt, much more simple and intelligible, is given in Arnold's Chronicle:—"Take a quarte of red wyne, an ounce of synamon, and halfe an unce of gynger; a quarter of an ounce of greynes, and long peper, and halfe a pounde of suger; and brose all this, and than put them in a bage of wullen clothe, made therefore, with the wyne; and lete it hange over a vessel, tyll the wyne be rune thorowe." A third receipt is given by Cogan,—"Take of cinamon two ounces, of ginger half an ounce, of grains a quarter of an ounce: punne them grosse, and put them into a pottle of good claret or white wine, with half a pound of sugar: let all steep together a night at the least, close covered in some bottle of glasse, pewter, or stone; and when you would occupy it, cast a thinne linnen cloath or a piece of a boulter over the mouth of the bottle, and let so much run through as you will drink at that time, keeping the rest close, for so it will keep both the spirit, odor, and virtue of the wine and spices." Ipocras seems to have been a great favourite with our ancestors, being served up at every entertainment, public or private. It generally made a part of the last course, and was taken immediately after dinner, with wafers or some other light biscuits. According to Pegge, it was in use at St. John's College, Cambridge, as late as the eighteenth century, and brought in at Christmas at the close of dinner.

With golde and ivoure that so brighte schone,
That alle aboute the bewtè men may se.
Lydgate, Rawlinson MS. f. 34.

Y. Aubrey mentions a curious custom, which I believe is now quite obsolete. "In several parts of Oxfordshire," he says, "particularly at Lanton, it is the custom for the maid-servant to ask the man for ivy to dress the house, and if the man denies or neglects to fetch in ivy, the maid steals away a pair of his breeches, and nails them up to the gate in the yard or highway."

IVY-BUSH. The ivy-bush was formerly hung out at taverns, to signify that good wine was sold there. The following from a rare work by Braithwaite, Law of Drinking, 12mo. Lond. 1617. is sufficiently curious to be given entire:

A president of binding any one apprentise to the known trade of the Ivy-bush, or Red-lettice; taken out of the ancient register-booke of Potina.

Be it knowne unto all men by these presents, that I Ralph Rednose of Running-Spiggot in the countie of Turne-Tap, bowzer, am tide and fast bound unto Francis Fiery-face in all up-carouses, in twenty pots sterling; that is to say, not by the common can or jug now used, but by the ancient full top and good measure, according to the laudable custome of the Red Lettice of Nip-scalpe; to the which said payment well and truely to be made, I bind me, my heires, ale-squires, pot-companions, lick-wimbles, malt-wormes, vine-fretters, and other faithfull drunkards, firmely by these presents: Dated the thirteenth of Scant-sober, and sealed with O I am sicke, and delivered with a bowle and a broome in the presence of the ostler, the tapster, and the chamberlaine.

IVY-GIRL. A writer in the Gentleman's Magazine, quoted by Brand, i. 35, mentions a sort of sport used in Kent during the month of February, where the girls were burning in triumph a figure which they had stolen from the boys, called a holly-boy, whilst the boys were doing the same with another figure called an ivy-girl. All this ceremony was accompanied with loud huzzas, noise, and acclamations. The writer adds, "what it all means I cannot tell, although I inquired of several of the oldest people in the place, who could only answer that it had always been a sport at this season of the year."

IWE. A Jew. Nominale MS.

MS. Lincoln A. i. 17, f. 99.

I-WIS. Certainly; truly; undoubtedly; to wit; especially; besides. (A.-S.) After the fifteenth century, this sense of the word seems to have been lost, and it appears to have been regarded as a pronoun and a verb, I know.

Berafrynde, i-seid Adam,
I-wysse thou art a wytty man,
Thou shalt wel drynk therfore.
MS. Cantab. Ff. v. 48, f. 49.

I am alwayes troubled with the litherlurden,
  I love so to linger;
I am so lasy, the mosse groweth an Inch thick on the top of my finger!
But if you list to knowe my name,

KING. Friday is sometimes called the king of the week. Devon.

KING-ARTHUR. A game used at sea, when near the line, or in a hot latitude. It is performed thus:—A man, who is to represent King Arthur, ridiculously dressed, having a large wig made out of oakum, or some old swabs, is seated on the side, or over a large vessel of water. Every person in his turn is to be ceremoniously introduced to him, and to pour a bucket of water over him, crying, Hail, King Arthur! If, during this ceremony, the person introduced laughs or smiles, to which his majesty endeavours to excite him by all sorts of ridiculous gesticulations, he changes place with him, and then becomes King Arthur, till relieved by some brother tar.

who has as little command over his muscles as himself.

KING-BY-YOUR-LEAVE. "A playe that children have, where one sytting blyndefolde in the midle, bydeth so tyll the rest have hydden themselves, and then he going to seeke them, if any get his place in the meane space, that same is kynge in his roume," Huloet, 1572. KIROCKS. The same as Kairns, q. v.

KIRSOME. Christian. Nares.

KIRTLE. A tunic, gown, or jacket. (A.-S.) The form of the kirtle underwent various alterations at different times. Palsgrave translates it by corpset. It was worn by both sexes. The woman's kirtle of the fourteenth century was a close-fitting dress described in Strutt, ii. 238; and the kirtle is mentioned in Launfal (233) as being laced tightly to the body. It seems to have been a mark of servitude or disgrace to appear in a kirtle only. The term is still retained in the provinces in the sense of an outer petticoat. When a long kirtle is spoken of, or when it is implied that the kirtle is long, it must be understood as having a kind of train or petticoat attached to it; and a half-kirtle is either part of this joint article of dress. See Gifford's Ben Jonson, ii. 260. The upper-kirtle was a garment worn over a kirtle.

KIRTYNE. A kind of sauce in ancient cookery. See the Ord. and Reg. p. 460.

KIT-CAT. A game played by boys in the East of England easier to play than to describe. Three small holes are made in the ground triangularly, about twenty feet apart to mark the position of as many boys, each of whom holds a small stick about two feet long. Three other boys of the adverse side pitch successively a piece of stick, a little bigger than one's thumb, called cat, to be struck by those holding the sticks. On its being struck, the boys run from hole to hole, dipping the end of their sticks in as they pass, and counting one, two, three, &c. as they do so, up to thirty-one, which is game, or the greater number of holes gained in the innings may indicate the winners as in cricket.

> Then in his hand he takes a thick bat,
> With which he us'd to play at kit-cat.
> Cotton's Works, 1734, p. 88.

KIT-CAT-CANNIO. A sedentary game, played by two, with slate and pencil, and decided by the position of certain marks.

LANCE. Explained by Hearne, "rouse, start, raise, stir up, shoot at." Apparently connected with Launche, q. v.

LANCEGAY. A sort of lance. Blount mentions it as prohibited by statute.

> Me thouȝte a fyry lancegay
> Whilom thorow myn herte he caste.
> Gower, MS. Soc. Antiq. 134, f. 247.

LANCE-KNIGHT. A foot-soldier. "Lasquenet, a lanceknight, or Germane footman," Cotgrave. "Lansnyght, lancequenet," Palsgrave. These quotations establish the correctness of Gifford's explanation, which is doubted by Nares. "Our lansquenight of Lowe-Germanie," Dekker's Knights Conjuring, p. 59. Blount says, "lance-knights were anciently such horsemen in war as were armed with lances."

LANCELET. A lancet. Baret.

LANCEPESADO. "The lowest range and meanest officer in an army is called the lancepesado, or prezado, who is the leader or governor of half a file," The Soldier's Accidence. The name is variously written.

(2) Part of a mill. Var. dial.

(3) A ladder. See Palsgrave, verb. f. 360; Collier's Old Ballads, pp. 33, 105.

LATHING. An invitation. Kennett says "the use of this word is most proper to Staffordshire." It occurs, however, in Watson. Grose, and Palmer, and is still in use.

LATHY. (1) Strong. Heref.

(2) Thin; slender, like a lath. Var. dial.

LATIMER. An interpreter. (A.-N.) "Lyare wes mi latymer," Wright's Lyric Poetry, p. 49. It is spelt latyneres in Maundevile, p. 58, which is the more correct form, Latin having been formerly applied to language in general.

LATING. The same as Lathe (1).

LATITAT. A noise; a scolding. West.

LATTAGE. An impediment, generally applied to a defect in speech. West.

LATTEN. Plate-tin. Palmer says the word is very common in this sense in Devon, and it is also found in the North country glossaries. Shakespeare is said to have given his godson, a child of Ben Jonson, a dozen latten spoons, and told the parent he should translate them. The pun is not uncommon in writers of Shakespeare's time, but the old word latten, or latoun, was not plate-tin, and the provincialism now in use must not mislead us, as it has Brockett, to attribute the same meaning to the archaism. It was a kind of mixed metal, very much resembling brass in its nature and colour. Various articles were made of it, as a cross, Chaucer, Cant. T. 701: a basin, Piers Ploughman, p. 462, &c. According to Mr. Hunter, the old brasses in churches are for the most part of latten.

LATTER. To run about idly. North. Also the same as Lafter, q. v.

LATTER-END. The seat of honour. South.

LATTERMATH. See Aftermath. "Lateward hay, latermath," Hollyband's Dictionarie, 1593 Still in use.

LATTICE. (1) Plate-tin. Cornw.

(2) An ale-house. Many inns formerly had this sign, and the ancient ale-house was generally distinguished by a lattice, not by a glass window, the latter substance being, as Gifford supposes, too fragile for the nature of the customers. See Ben Jonson, i. 96.

LATTING. Late; backward. West.

LAU. (1) Low. (2) A low or flame. (A.-S.)

LAUCHAIDS. Terraces, natural or artificial, on the sides of hills. Devon.

LAUDATION. Praise. (Lat.) It occurs in Hawkins' Engl. Dram. i. 22.

LAUDE. Praise. Chaucer.

LAUDES. The service of matins.

LAUGH. To laugh the other side of one's mouth, i. e. to cry. Var. dial.

LAUGH-AND-LAY-DOWN. A juvenile game at cards, in which the winner, who holds a certain combination of cards, lays them down upon the table, and laughs at his good success, or, at least, is supposed to do so. Old writers generally call it laugh and lie down, as Florio, p. 74. Sometimes the double entendre is not of the most delicate description.

> At laugh and lie downe if they play,
> What asse against the sport can bray?
> Lilly's Mother Bombie, ed. 1632, sig Dd. ii.

LAUGHE. Taken; captured.

> Lordes of Lorayne and Lumbardye bothene
> Laughe was and lede in with oure lele knyghttez.
> Morte Arthure, MS. Lincoln, f. 85.

LAUGHT. (1) A loft. Devon.

(2) Took; caught; received.

> The paiem fel ded to grounde,
> His soule laught helle hounde.
> Arthour and Merlin, p. 236.

> Boldely hys swyrde he lawghte,
> To the gyaunt soche a strok he raghte.
> MS. Cantab. Ff. ii. 38, f. 89.

(3) The same as Laughe, q. v.

> And ther was Lewlyne laughte, and Lewlyns brothere,
> With lordez of Lebe, and lede to theire strenghez
> Morte Arthure, MS. Lincoln, f. 72.

LAUK. (1) To weed. Var. dial.

(2) To strike; to beat. North.

(3) A common exclamation of surprise.

LAUM. To swoon. Somerset.

(2) A straight ruler. Palsgrave.

LEVEL-COIL. A rough game, formerly much in fashion at Christmas, in which one hunted another from his seat. Florio, p. 138, mentions "a Cristmas game called rise up good fellow, or itch buttocke," which refers to the same amusement. "Jouër à cul-leve, to play at levell-coyle," Cotgrave. Hence the phrase came to be used for any noisy riot. It was also called level-sice, and Skelton, ii. 31, spells it levell suse. Blount gives the following very curious explanation, "level-coile is when three play at tables, or other game, by turns, onely two playing at a time, the loser removes his buttock, and sits out; and therefore called also hitch-buttock," ed. 1681, p. 374.

LEVELLERS. Persons who advocate an equalization of property &c. The term was common during the civil wars, when there were many who professed those opinions.

LEVEN. To alleviate. Lydgate.

LEVENE. Lightning. (A.-S.)

> The thondir, with his firy levene,
> So cruel was upon the hevene.

LOVE-FEAST. An annual feast celebrated in some parishes on the Thursday next before Easter. See Edwards's Old English Customs, 1842, p. 60.

LOVEL. A common name formerly for a dog. According to Stowe, p. 847, William Collingborne was executed in 1484 for writing the following couplet on the king's ministers:

> The Ratte, the Catte, and Lovell our dogge,
> Rule all England under the hogge.

LOVE-LIKINGE. Graciousness; peace. (A.-S.)

LOVE-LOCKS. Pendant locks of hair, falling near or over the ears, and cut in a variety of fashions. This ridiculous appendage to the person is often alluded to by the writers previous to the Restoration.

> Why should thy sweete love-locke hang dangling downe,
> Kissing thy girdle-stud with falling pride?
> Although thy skin be white, thy haire is browne;
> Oh, let not then thy haire thy beautie hide
> The Affectionate Shepheard, 1

LOVELOKER. More lovely. (A.-S.)

(2) To heap, or pile up. Devon.

(3) Low-spirited; melancholy. Var. dial.

(4) A small hill or eminence. North. "A low, a small round hill, a heap of earth or stones; hence the barrows or congregated hillocks, which remain as sepulchres of the dead, are called loughs," MS. Lansd. 1033. It frequently means a bank or hill in early English, as in Chester Plays, i. 120; Reliq. Antiq. i. 120; Kyng Alisaunder, 4348; Sharp's Cov. Myst. p. 89; but it should be noticed that the A.-S. word is more usually applied to artificial hills, as tumuli, than to natural mounds. The names of many places ending in low are thus derived, as Ludlow, &c.; see Mr. Wright's History, p. 13. "A fire on low," Sir Degoré.

> He is, he seide, ther he is won
> With oure sheep upon the lowe.

> Askyd a mand of the chyld.
> MS. Ashmole 61, f 87

MANDEMENT. A mandate. (A.-N.)

MANDER. To cry. Suffolk.

MANDILION. The mandilion or mandevile was a kind of loose garment without sleeves, or if with sleeves, having them hanging at the back. "Cassacchino, a mandilion, a jacket, a jerkin," Florio, p. 87. Harrison, p. 172, mentions "the mandilion worne to Collie Weston ward," i. e. awry. This curious early notice of the Colly-Weston proverb was accidentally omitted in its proper place.

> French dublet, and the Spanish hose to breech it;
> Short cloakes, old mandilions (we beseech it).
> Rowlands' Knave of Harts, 1613.

MANDRAKE. The mandragora, Lat. It is often mentioned as a narcotic, and very numerous were the superstitions regarding it. It was said to shriek when torn up. "Mandrakes and night-ravens still shriking in thine eares," Dekker's Knights Conjuring, p. 49.

> The male mandrake hath great, broad, long, smooth leaves, of a deepe greene colour, flat spred upon the ground; among which come up the flowers of a pale whitish colour, standing every one upon a single smal and weak footstalk, of a whitish green colour; in their places grow round apples of a yellowish colour, smooth, soft, and glittering, of a strong smel; in which are conteined flat and smooth seedes, in fashion of a little kidney, like those of the thorn apple. The roote is long, thick, whitish, divided many times into two or three parts, resembling the legs of a man, with other parts of his bodie adjoining thereto, as the privie parts, as it hath beene reported; whereas in truth it is no otherwise then in the rootes of carrots, parsneps, and such like, forked or devided into two or more parts which nature taketh no account of. There have been many ridiculous tales brought up of this plant, whether of old wives or some runnagate surgeons or phisickmongers, I know not (a title bad inough for them) but sure some one or moe that sought to make themselves famous in skillfull above others were the first brochers of that errour I spake of. They adde further, that it is never or verie seldome to be founde growing naturally but under a gallows, where the matter that hath fallen from the dead bodie hath given it the shape of a man; and the matter of a woman, the substaunce of a female plant, with many other such doltish dreames. They fable further and affirm, that he who woulde take up a plant thereof must tie a dogge thereunto to pull it up, which will give a great shrike at the digging up; otherwise if a man should do it, he should certainly die in short space after; besides many fables of loving matters, too full of scurrilitie to set foorth in print, which I forbeare to speake of; all which dreames and old wives tales you shall from hencefoorth cast out of your bookes and memorie, knowing this that they are all and every part of them false and most untrue. For I myselfe and my servaunts also have digged up, planted, and replanted verie many; and yet never could either perceive shape of man or woman, but sometimes one straight roote, sometimes two, and often sixe or seaven braunches, comming from the maine great roote; even as nature list to bestowe upon it as to other plants. But the idle drones that have little or nothing to do but eate and drinke, have bestowed some of their time in carving the rootes of Brionie, forming them to the shape of men and women, which falsifying practise hath confirmed the errour amongst the simple and unlearned people, who have taken them upon their report to be the true mandrakes. Gerard's Herball, ed. 1597, p. 280.

MANDY. Saucy; impudent; frolicsome; unmanageable. West.

> MS. Harl. 1701, f. 53.

(2) To win the mare or lose the halter, to play double or quits.

(3) The sport of crying the mare has been already mentioned. It is thus more particularly described in Blount's Glossographia, ed. 1681, p. 398:—"To cry the mare is an ancient custom in Herefordshire, viz. when each husbandman is reaping the last of his corn, the workmen leave a few blades standing, and tye the tops of them together, which is the mare, and then stand at a distance and throw their sickles at it, and he that cuts the knot has the prize; which done, they cry with a loud voice, I have her, I have her, I have her. Others answer, What have you, what have you, what have you? A mare, a mare, a mare. Whose is she, whose is she, whose is she? J. B. (naming the owner three times). Whither will you send her? To John-a-Nokes, (naming some neighbor who has not all his corn reapt). Then they all shout three times, and so the ceremony ends with good chear. In Yorkshire upon like occasion they have a Harvest Dame, in Bedfordshire a Jack and a Gill."

MICH. To skulk, or hide secretly; to play truant. "That mite is miching in this grove," Lilly, ed. 1632, sig. Aa. ix. Minsheu has, "to miche, or secretly to hide himselfe out of the way, as truants doe from schoole." It is still used in exactly this sense in the provinces. "To miche, to shrug or sneake in some corner, and with pouting lips to shew anger, as an ape being beaten and grinning with his teeth," Florio, p. 6. "Miche, to creep softly," MS. Yorksh. Gl. Micher, derived from this verb, may be explained, a sly thief, one who steals things of small value, or more usually, a truant or skulking fellow. "Mecher, a lyteli thefe, laronceau," Palsgrave. It occurs in Rom. of the Rose, 6541, where the A. N. original reads lierres, voleur. "Theyves, mychers, and cut-purse," Kennett, p. 105. Grose has, "Michers, thieves, pilferers," as a Norfolk word, and it is also given in the same sense in MS. Lansd. 1033. "Thefes and mychers keyn," Towneley Myst. p. 216. "A blackberry moucher, an egregious truant," Dean Milles' MS. p. 180. The application of the word in the sense of truant is often found in later writers, as in Shakespeare, who is well illustrated by the following passage, "in the Forest of Dean to mooche blackberries, or simply to mooch, means to pick blackberries, and blackberries have thus obtained there the name of mooches," Heref. Gl. p. 69. "Fy, fy, it will not beseme us to playe the mychers," Elyot, ed. 1559, in v. Apage. "How like a micher he standes, as though he had trewanted from honestie," Lilly's Mother Bombie, 1594. "Circumforanus, a mycher," Nominale MS. "Mike, to idle, loiter," Salop. Antiq. p. 505. It was often used as a term of contempt; Hollyband gives it as the translation of caignard, and Cotgrave has, "Chiche-face, a chichiface, micher, sneake-bill, wretched fellow."

> Another should have spoke us two betweene,
> But, like a meacher, hee's not to be seene.
> Hee's runne away even in the very nick.
> MS. Poems, xvii. Cent.

MS. Lincoln A. i. 17, f. 19.

MOTHER-WIT. No wit at all. An old writer gives the following as an example of mother-wit—"like that which was in a certaine country gentleman, whom the Queene of Arabia meeting, and knowing him to be a man of no great wisedome, demaunded of him when his wife should be brought to bed: who answered, Even when your highnesse shall command."

A grave discreet gentleman having a comely wife, whose beauty and free behaviour did draw her honesty into suspition, by whom hee had a sonne almost at mans estate, of very dissolute and wanton carriage. I muse, said one, that a man of such stayd and moderate gravity should have a sonne of such a contrary and froward disposition. Sir, reply'd another, the reason is that his pate is stuffed with his Mothers wit, that there is no roome for any of his father's wisedome: besides, the lightnesse of her heeles is gotten into her sonnes braines.
Taylor's Wit and Mirth, 1630, p. 185.

NAKED-BED. A person undressed and in bed was formerly said to be in naked-bed, and, according to Brockett, the phrase is still in use applied to any one entirely naked. The term was probably derived from the ancient custom of sleeping without night linen, which was most common in this country during the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth centuries. The Danes and Saxons appear to have been far more civilized in this respect. In Isumbras, 102, a mother and her children are described as escaping from a fire "alle als nakede als thay were borne;" but it would seem from a passage in Piers Ploughman, p. 273, that the practice was not quite universal. See Mr. Wright's notes, p. 557; Ritson's Anc. Pop. Poet. p. 49. Compare also Armin's Nest of Ninnies, p. 24, "Jemy ever used to lye naked, as is the use of a number." Two very curious anecdotes in Hall, Henry VII. ff. 20, 53, may also be consulted. "In naked bedde, au lict couché tout nud; in naked bedde, couchez nud a nud, or on les trouva coucher ensemble nud a nud," Palsgrave.

Ne be thi winpil nevere so jelu ne so stroutende,
Ne thi faire tail so long ne so trailende,
That tu ne schalt at evin al kuttid bilevin,
And tou schalt to bedde gon so nakid as tou were [borin].
Reliq. Antiq. ii. 15.

A noysom worm, or coverlid,
Or side-piece of thy naked bed.
Fletcher's Poems, p. 105.

NICHIL. (1) To castrate. Yorksh.

(2) A person who pays nothing. West.

NICHOLAS. The patron saint of boys. In boys' games, the cry of Nicholas entitles the speaker to a temporary suspension of the amusement. St. Nicholas's clerks, a cant term for thieves. "One of saint Nicholas clerks, or an arrant theefe," Cotgrave, in v. Compter. Grose has this phrase.

NICK. (1) Used in the proverbial expression "to knock a nick in the post," i. e., to make a record of any remarkable event. This is evidently an ancient method of recording. Similarly we have "cut your stick," in which the reference is clearly to the ancient tallies; it is equivalent to "make your mark and pass on." Hence also, "in the nick of time," i. e., just as the notch was being cut. In the nick, exactly. North.

(2) To nick with nay, to deny, a very common phrase in early English.

> On her knees they kneleden adoun,
> And prayden hym off hys benysoun;
> He nykkyd hem with nay;
> Neyther of cros neyther off ryng,
> Hadde they non kyns wetyng,

(6) To win at dice. Grose. "To tye or nicke a cast at dice," Florio, p. 280.

(7) To nick the nick, to hit exactly the critical moment or time.

(8) A raised or indented bottom in a beer-can, formerly a great grievance with the consumer. A similar contrivance in a wine-bottle is called the kick. Grose has neck-stamper, the boys who collect the pots belonging to an ale-house sent out with beer to private houses.

> There was a tapster, that with his pots smalnesse, and with frothing of his drinke, had got a good summe of money together. This nicking of the pots he would never leave, yet divers times he had been under the hand of authority, but what money soever hee had [to pay] for his abuses, hee would be sure (as they all doe) to get it out of the poore mans pot againe.
> Life of Robin Goodfellow, 1628.
> From the nick and froth of a penny pot-house,
> From the fidle and cross, and a great Scotch-louse,
> From committees that chop up a man like a mouse.
> Fletcher's Poems, p. 133.
> Our pots were full quarted,
> We were not thus thwarted
> With froth-canne and nick-pot,
> And such nimble quick shot.
> Elynour Rummynge, ed. 1624.

(9) To catch in the act. Var. dial.

> MS. Cantab. Ff. ii. 38, f. 81.

NIGHEST-ABOUT. The nearest way. North.

NIGH-HAND. Probably. Leic.

NIGHT-BAT. A ghost. North.

NIGHT-COURTSHIP. This custom, which appears to be now falling into disuse, is thus described in a note to Anderson's Ballads:—

> A Cumbrian peasant pays his addresses to his sweetheart during the silence and solemnity of midnight, when every bosom is at rest, except that of love and sorrow. Anticipating her kindness, he will travel ten or twelve miles over hills, bogs, moors, and mosses, undiscouraged by the length of the road, the darkness of the night, or the intemperature of the weather; on reaching her habitation, he gives a gentle tap at the window of her chamber, at which signal she immediately rises, dresses herself, and proceeds with all possible silence to the door, which she gently opens, lest a creaking hinge or a barking dog should awaken the family. On his entrance into the kitchen, the luxuries of a Cumbrian cottage—cream and sugared curds—are placed before him by the fair hand of his Dulcinea; next, the courtship commences, previously to which, the fire is darkened or extinguished, lest its light should guide to the window some idle or licentious eye; in this dark and uncomfortable situation (at least uncomfortable to all but lovers), they remain till the advance of day, depositing in each other's bosoms the secrets of love, and making vows of unalterable affection.

NIGHT-CROW. A well-known bird, otherwise called the night-jar. "Nicticorax, a nyght-craw" Nominale MS. Palsgrave translates it by cresserelle.

NIGHTERTALE. Night-time. (A.-S.)

> His men coom bi nyȝturtale,
> With hem awey his body stale.
> Cursor Mundi, MS. Coll. Trin. Cantab. f. 49.
> By nyȝtertale he was slayne be kynge Darie.
> Occleve, MS. Soc. Antiq. 134, f. 272.

NIGHTGALE. The nightingale.

> Wyth alkyne gladchipe thay gladdene themeselvene,
> Of the nyghtgale notez the noisez was swette.
> Morte Arthure, MS. Lincoln, f. 63.

NIGHT-KERT-CHEF. A lady's neck handkerchief. It is the translation of collerette in Hollyband's Dictionarie, 1593.

NIGHT-MAGISTRATE. A constable.

NIGHT-MARE. The charm for the night-mare mentioned in the following curious passage is quoted in Beaumont and Fletcher, and other early writers:

> If this disease chancing often to a man, be not cured in time, it may perhaps grow to a worse mischiefe, as to the faling evil, madnesse, or apopelexy. But I could never learne that horses were subject to this disease, neither by relation, nor yet by reading, but only in an old English writer, who sheweth neither cause nor signes how to know when a horsse hath it, but onely teacheth how to cure it with a fond foolish charme, which because it may perhaps make you, gentle reader, to laugh, as wel as it did me, for recreation sake I will heere rehearse it. Take a flint stone that hath a hole of his owne kinde, and hang it over him, and write in a bill,
> In nomine Patris, &c.
> Saint George our Ladies knight,
> He walked day, so did he night,
> Untill he her found,
> He her beate, and he her bound,
> Till truely her troath she him plight,
> That she would not come within the night,
> There as saint George our Ladies knight,
> Named was three times, saint George.
> And hang this scripture over him, and let him alone: with such proper charmes as this is, the false friers in times past were wont to charme the mony out of plaine folks purses. Topsell's Beasts, 1607, p. 353.

NIGHT-RAIL. A sort of vail or covering for the head, often worn by women at night. See Middleton's Works, i. 164. Mr. Dyce absurdly explains it night-gown, which makes nonsense in the passage referred to. Howell has, "a night-rail for a woman, toca de muger de nochez."

NIGHT-RAVEN. The bittern. "Niticorax, a nyte-rawyn," Nominale MS.

NIGHT-SHADE. A prostitute.

NIGHT-SNAP. A night-robber.

NIGHT-SNEAKERS. "Wanton or effeminate lads night-sneakers," Florio, p. 105.

NIGHT-SPELL. A spell or charm against the night-mare.

NIGIT. A coward; a dastard.

> This cleane nigit was a foole,
> Shapt in meane of all.
> Armin's Nest of Ninnies, 1608.

NIGMENOG. A very silly fellow.

(2) Will not. (A.-S.) Will he nill he, whether he will or not. Hence, to be unwilling.

> Nylling to dwell where syn is wrought.
> Ashmole's Theat. Chem. Brit 1652, p. 117

(3) A needle. Still in use.

NIM. (1) To take. Also, to steal. Hence the character Corporal Nym.

> Nym, he seyde, this theof
> Faste in alle wyse,
> And wyn of him the tresour,
> And make him do sacrifyse.
> MS Trin. Coll. Oxon. [illegible]

NIND. Needs must. Linc.

NINE-EYED. A term of reproach.

NINE-EYES. A kind of small eel.

NINE-HOLES. A game differently described by various writers. According to Forby, nine round holes are made in the ground, and a ball aimed at them from a certain distance; or the holes are made in a board with a number over each, through one of which the ball is to pass. Nares thinks it is the same game with nine-men's morris, called in some places ninepenny-marl.

NINE-MURDER. A kind of hawk. See Florio, p. 205. Cotgrave apparently mentions two birds so called, in v. Escriere, Soucie.

NINE-MUSES. An old dance, mentioned in MS. Rawl. Poet. 108.

NINE-PINS. A game somewhat similar to skittles. It is mentioned by Florio, ed. 1611, p. 15, and is still in use.

NINETED. Wicked; perverse. South.

NINGLE. A contracted form of mine ingle, common in old plays.

NINNY-NONNY. Uncertain. Linc.

NINNYVERS. The white water-lily.

NINNYWATCH. A vain hope; a silly or foolish expectation. Devon.

NINT. To beat; to anoint. Var. dial.

NIP. (1) A satirical taunt. Also a verb, to taunt satirically. "S'entrepicquer, to pricke, nip, taunt, quip, cut, each other," Cotgrave. "A dry-bob, jeast, or nip," ibid.

(2) A thief. An old cant term. "To nyp a bong," to cut a purse, Harman's Caveat, 1567.

(3) Cut. Robin Hood, i. 100.

(4) To snatch up hastily. Yorksh.

(5) A short steep ascent. North. Occasionally, a hill or mountain.

(6) To pinch closely. Hence applied to a parsimonious person. Var. dial.

(7) A turnip. Suffolk.

NIP-CHEESE. A miserly person. Var. dial. Sometimes called a nip-squeeze, or a nip-farthing.

NIP-NOSE. A phrase applied to a person whose nose is bitten by frost.

NIPPER. A cut-purse. Dekker. Also termed a nipping-Christian.

NIPPERKIN. A small measure of beer.

NIPPET. A small quantity. Essex.

NIPPITATO. Strong liquor, chiefly applied to ale. A cant term.

NIPPLE. "A little cocke, end, or nipple perced, or that hath an hole after the mar of a breast, which is put at the end of chanels of a fountaine, wherthrough the runneth forth," Baret, 1580.

NIPPY. (1) Hungry. Dorset.

(2) An old game at cards, conjectured to be the same as cribbage. It appears from the Complete Gamester, 1682, p. 76, that Knave Noddy was the designation of the knave of trumps in playing that game. The game is by no means obsolete. Carr mentions noddy-fifteen in his Craven Gl. Noddy is now played as follows: Any number can play—the cards are all dealt out—the elder hand plays one, (of which he hath a pair or a prial if a good player)—saying or singing "there's a good card for thee," passing it to his right hand neighbour—the person next in succession who holds its pair covers it, saying "there's a still better than he;" and passes both onward—the person holding the third of the sort (ace, six, queen, or what not) puts it on with "there's the best of all three:" and the holder of the fourth crowns all with the emphatic—"And there is Niddy-Noddeee." —He wins the tack, turns it down, and begins again. He who is first out receives from his adversaries a fish (or a bean, as the case may be) for each unplayed card. This game is mentioned in Arch. viii. 149; Taylor's Motto, 1622, sig. D. iv.

NODDY-HEADED. Tipsy. Oxon.

NODDY-POLL. A simpleton. Noddy-pate is also used, and Florio, p. 214, has noddy-peake. "Benet, a simple, plaine, doltish fellow, a noddipeake, a ninnyhammer, a pea-goose, a coxe, a sillie companion," Cotgrave.

NODILE. The noddle or head. "Occiput, a nodyle," Nominale MS.

ORIEL. This term is stated by Mr. Hamper to have been formerly used in various senses, viz. a penthouse; a porch attached to any edifice; a detached gate-house; an upper-story; a loft; a gallery for minstrels. See a long dissertation in the Archæologia, xxiii. 106-116. Perhaps, however, authority for an interpretation may be found which will compress these meanings, few words having really so comprehensive and varied an use. It may generally be described as a recess within a building. Blount has oriol, "the little waste room next the hall in some houses and monasteries, where particular persons dined;" and this is clearly an authorised and correct explanation. Nisi in refectorio vel oriolo pranderet, Mat. Paris; in introitu, quod porticus vel oriolum appellatur, ibid. The oriel was sometimes of considerable dimensions See a note in Warton, i. 176.

PACKMAN. A pedlar. Var. dial.

PACK-MONDAY. The first Monday after the 10th of October.

PACK-PAPER. Paper used for packing tradesmen's wares in, &c.

PACK-RAG-DAY. Old May-day: so called because servants being hired in this county from Old May-day to Old May-day, pack up their rags or clothes on this day preparatory to leaving their then servitudes for home or fresh places. Linc. Forby gives the term to Old Michaelmas-day.

PACK-STAFF. A pedlar's staff, on which he carried his pack. "As plain as a pack-staff" was a proverbial simile. We now say pike-staff. It was also a term of contempt. Thus aerunna is translated "a pack-staff misery" in Welde's Janua Linguarum, 1615.

PACK-THREAD. To talk pack-thread, to use indecent language well wrapped up.

PACK-THREAD-GANG. A gang that would not hold long together, some of whom might be induced by a reward to split upon the others. Linc.

PACK-WAY. A narrow way by which goods could be conveyed only on pack-horses. East.

PACOBI. A kind of wine, so called from some sort of Brazilian fruit.

PACOLET'S-HORSE. An enchanted steed belonging to Pacolet, in the old romance of Valentine and Orson. He is frequently alluded to by early writers.

PACTION. Combination; contract.

> Since with the soule we in soft paction bee,
> These sounds, sights, smels, or tastes, can nere please mee;
> My soule is fled, no more in me't can move,
> Alas! my soule is only where I love.

(3) To abuse any one. Exmoor.

(4) To toddle; to trample. East.

(5) "To paddle, proprie aquam manibus pedibusque agitare, metaphorice adhibere plus paulo; to have paddled, to have made a little too free with strong liquor; to paddle etiam designat molliter manibus tractare aliquid et agitare, as to paddle in a ladies neck or bosom," MS. Devon Glossary.

PADDLE-STAFF. A long staff, with an iron spike at the end of it, like a small spade, much used by mole-catchers.

PADDLING-STRINGS. Leading strings. North.

PADDOCK. A toad. In the provinces the term is also applied to a frog. "In Kent we say to a child, your hands are as cold as a paddock," MS. Lansd. 1033. To bring haddock to paddock, i. e. to outrun one's expenses. It is used as a term of contempt in the following passage:

> Boys now blaberyn bostynge of a baron bad,
> In Bedlem is born be bestys, suche bost is blowe;
> I xal prune that paddok and prevyn hym as a pad,
> Scheldys and sperys shalle I there sowe.
> Coventry Mysteries, p. 164.

PADDOCK-CHESE. The asparagus. This name occurs in an ancient list of plants in MS. Bib. Soc. Antiq. 101, f. 89.

PADDOCK-RUD. The spawn of frogs. Cumb.

PADOWE. Padua. Warkworth, p. 5.

> He set hym up and sawe their biside
> A sad man, in whom is no pride,
> Right a discrete confessour, as I trow,
> His name was called sir John Doclow;
> He had commensed in many a worthier place
> Then ever was Padow, or Boleyn de Grace.
> MS. Rawl. C. 86.

PADSTOOL. A toadstool. North.

> Hermolaus also writeth this of the Lycurium, that it groweth in a certaine stone, and that it is a kind of mushrom, or padstoole, which is cut off yearely, and that another groweth in the roome of it, a part of the roote or foot being left in the stone, groweth as hard as a flint, and thus doth the stone encrease with a naturall fecundity; which admirable thing (saith he) I could never be brought to beleeve, untill I did eate thereof in myne owne house. Topsell's Beasts, 1607, p. 494.

PAD-THE-HOOF. To walk. North.

PAE. A peacock. Ritson.

PAFFELDEN. Baggage. Cumb.

PAFFLING. Trifling; idle; silly. North.

PAG. To carry pick-a-back. Linc.

PAGAMENT. A kind of frieze cloth.

PAGE. The common and almost only name of a shepherd's servant, whether boy or man. It is, I believe, extensively used through Suffolk, and probably farther. As an appendage of royalty or nobility, a page is now chiefly known to us. In old English, the term is applied to a boy-child, or boy-servant.

PAGENCY. A scaffold. The term pageant was originally so used, and metaphorically applied to a part in the stage of life. Pagion, a pageant, Misfortunes of Arthur, p. 61.

PAGETEPOOS. Efts; lizards; frogs. Cornw.

PAGYIN. Writing?

> This boke of alle haly writes es mast usede in haly kirke servyse, forthi that it es perfeccioun of divyne pagyin. MS. Coll. Eton. 10, f. 1.

PAID. (1) A sore. Staff.

> As Syr Marrokk sayde.
> He goth forthe and holdyth hys pese,
> More he thenkyth then he says,
> He was fulle evylle payde.
> MS. Cantab. Ff. ii. 38, f. 72.

PAIGLE. The cowslip. East.

> The yellow marigold, the sunnes owne flower,
> Pagle, and pinke, that decke faire Floraes bower.
> Heywood's Marriage Triumphe, 1613.

PAIK. To beat severely. North.

PAILLET. A couch. (A.-N.)

PAIL-STAKE. A bough with branches, fixed in the ground in the dairy-yard for hanging pails on. Glouc.

PAIN-BALK. An instrument of torture, probably the same as the brake.

PAINCHES. Tripe. North.

PAINCHES-WAGGON. A north-country phrase implying incessant labour.

PAINE-MAINE. A fine bread. "Payne mayne, payn de bouche," Palsgrave.

> Paynedemaynes prevaly
> Scho fett fra the pantry. MS. Lincoln A. i. 17, f. 135.

PAINFULLY. Laboriously. The French Alphabet, 8vo. Lond. 1615, was, as we are told on the title-page, "painfully gathered and set in order."

> Most happy we were, during our continuance here, in the weekly sermons and almost frequent converse of Mr. Edward Calamie, that was the preacher of that parish; and this indeed was one of the chief motives that drew us thither to partake of his painful and pious preaching. MS. Harl. 646

PAINING. Pain; torture. (A.-S.)

> Ther he saw many a sore torment,
> How sowlis were put in gret paynyng;
> He saw his fadur how he brent,
> And be the memburs how he hyng.
> MS. Cantab. Ff. v. 48, f. 67.

PAINT. To blush.

PAINTED-CLOTH. Cloth or canvass painted in oil, a cheap substitute for tapestry. It was frequently the receptacle of verses or mottos.

PAINTER. The rope that lies in the ship's longboat or barge, always ready to fasten her or hale her on the shore. Whence we have the sea-proverb, I'll cut your painter, meaning I will prevent your doing me any hurt, injury, or mischief. See Grose, in v.

PAIR. (1) A number. Cornw.

(2) A pack of cards.

(3) To grow mouldy, as cheese. West.

(4) Only a pair of shears between them, i. e. little or no difference.

> And some report that both these fowles have seene
> Their like, that's but a payre of sheeres betweene.
> Taylor's Workes, 1630, i. 10[illegible]

PAIRE. To impair. (A.-N.)

Hit was wel i-wroughte and faire,
Non egge-tol mighte it nought paire.
Beves of Hampton, p. 40.

PAIRING. The name of a marriage feast in Devon, when the friends of the happy couple present them with various things, and sometimes money. MS. Devon Glossary, p. 172. It is now obsolete.

PAIR-OF-STAIRS. A flight of stairs.

PAIR-OF-WINGS. Oars. Grose.

PAIR-OF-WOOD. Timber supporting the broken roof of a mine.

PAIR-ROYAL. A term at cards, meaning three of a sort. See Prial.

PAISE. (1) To weigh. (A.-N.)

Paise thy materes or thou deme or decerne,
Let ryght in causes holde thy lanterne.
MS. Cantab. Ff. i. 6, f. 129.

(2) To open a bolt or lock by shoving as with a knife point. Northumb.

PAISFULIK. Peacefully. It occurs in MS. Cotton. Vespas. D. vii. Ps. 34.

PAISTER. "I comber, I payster with over many clothes wearyng aboute one, jemmoufle," Palsgrave. Pester?

PAIT. The rut of a wheel. "Orbita, Anglice a paytt," Nominale MS.

PAITRICK. A partridge. North.

PAITRURE. Part of a horse's armour, for defending the neck.

PAIWURT. The herb saxifrage.

PAJOCK. This word occurs in Hamlet, iii. 2, altered by modern editors to peacock, a substitution by no means satisfactory, nor are farfetched etymological conjectures more so. The nearest approach to the term I have met with in old English is to be found in the word paphawkes in the Coventry Mysteries, p. 179. Both are used as terms of contempt.

PAKE. To peep at. "What are you paking at?" Perhaps it would be better spelt peak. Suffolk.

PALABRAS. Words. (Span.)

PALACE. A storehouse. Devon. "At Dartmouth I am told there are some of these storehouses called palaces cut out of the rock still retaining the name," MS. Devon Gloss.

PALASINS. Belonging to the court.

PALATE. A thin oval plate or board with a hole at one end for admittance of the thumb, which a painter holds to spread and mix his colours while he is drawing.

PALAVER. To flatter. Var. dial.

PALCH. To walk slowly. Devon.

PALCHIN. This word is of very unusual occurrence. It seems to mean a kind of short spear such as is used for spearing large fish. "Pawlchyne for fyssche, lunchus," Nominale MS. Ducange explains lunchus as lancea, hasta, from the Greek λογχος. It does not occur in the Prompt. Parv. nor in the Medulla.

PALCHING. Mending clothes. Exmoor.

PALE. (1) To beat barley. Chesh.

(2) To ornament; to stripe.

Palaises proudliche pyghte, that palyd ware ryche
Of palle and of purpure, wyth precyous stones.
Morte Arthure, MS. Lincoln, f. 67.

(3) A ditch, or trench. (A.-S.) It occurs in MS. Egerton 829, f. 5.

(4) A small fortress.

(5) An inclosure for cattle. Linc.

(6) A stripe in heraldry.

(7) To make pale. (A.-N.)

(8) A limit or boundary. Shak.

(9) To leap the pale, i. e. to be extravagant, to exceed one's expenses.

If you proceede as you have begunne, your full feeding wil make you leane, your drinking too many healthes will take all health from you, your leaping the pale will cause you looke pale, your too close following the fashion will bring you out of all forme and fashion.
The Man in the Moone, 1609, sig. C. iv

PALEIS. A palace. (A.-N.)

PALERON. Part of the armour. "A pece of harnesse, espalleron," Palsgrave.

PALESTRALL. Athletic. It occurs in Chaucer's Troilus and Creseide, v. 304.

PALET. Scull; head. "Knok thi palet," Minot's Poems, p. 31. There was a kind of armour for the head also so called, as appears from Pr. Parv., probably lined with fur.

PALEW. Pale. It occurs in the Optick Glasse of Humours, 1639, p. 108.

It is somewhat fatty, in colour palew, reddish, high coloured, and without other signes of concoction.
Fletcher's Differences, 1623

And wel a palefrey bistride,
And wel upon a stede ride. Havelok, 2060.

PALING. Imitating pales. (A.-N.)

PALINGMAN. A fishmonger. Skinner.

PALL. "I palle as drinke or bloode dothe by longe standyng in a thynge, je appallys," Palsgrave. Still in use.

PALLADE. Palle, or rich cloth. "He dyd of his surcote of pallade," Isenbras, 124.

PALL-COAT. A short garment, somewhat like a short cloak with sleeves.

PALLE. A kind of fine cloth. It was used at a very early period to cover corpses, and the term is still retained for the cloth which covers the coffin; but this was by no means its most general use, for the robes of persons of rank are constantly mentioned as made of "purpure palle;" and in a passage in Launfal tapestry of that material is mentioned. An archbishop's pall is thus described by Stanihurst, p. 31—"A pall is an indowment appropriated to archbishops, made of white silke the breadth of a stole, but it is of another fashion." Descr. of Ireland, 1586.

So fere he went I sey i-wys,
That he wyst not where he was.
He that sate in boure and halle,
And on hym were the purpull palle,
Now in herd heth he lyȝet,
With levys and gresse his body kydyth.
MS. Ashmole 61, xv. Cent.

For also wel to him hit falles
As a dongehulle sprad with palles.
MS. Addit. 10036, f. [illegible]

This twaylle y-bordryd abouȝt was
With palle, the mountenesse of han hondbrede
Chron. Vilodun. p. 64.

PALLED. (1) Turned pale. Devon.
(2) Senseless, death-like, as one is from excessive drinking. In use in Yorkshire.

PALLEE. Broad; used only in conjunction with another word, as pallee-foot, a large broad foot, pallee-paw, a large broad hand. Somerset.

PALLEN. To knock. (A.-S.)

PALLESTRE. A child's ball. (A.-N.)

PALL-HORSE. A horse bearing a pannier. "Sagmarius, Anglice a palhors," Nominale MS. f. 4. Ducange explains sagmarius by equus clitellarius.

PALLIAMENT. A robe; the white gown of a Roman candidate. Shak.

PALLIARD. A born beggar. According to the Fraternitye of Vacabondes, 1575, "is he that goeth in a patched cloke, and hys doxy goeth in like apparell." Paliardize, dirtiness and shabbiness, Hamblet, 1608, p. 181; Downfall of Robert, Earl of Huntington, p. 36. The following account of them is given by a writer of the last century:—A cant name for a wretched set of men and women, whose whole delight is to live by begging, thieving, &c. or any thing but honest industry, and who to move compassion in the spectators, the women go about with one, two, or more small children, in a dirty, ragged condition, who are continually crying or making wry faces, as though starved with hunger, and the women making a lamentable cry, or doleful tale, of being a distressed widow, and almost starved, &c. at the same time her male companion lies begging in the fields, streets, &c. with cleymes or artificial sores, made with spearwort or arsenick, which draws them into blisters, or by unslacked lime and soap, tempered with the rust of old iron, which being spread upon leather, and bound very hard to the leg, presently so frets the skin, that the flesh appears raw, and shocking to the sight; the impostor at the same time making a hideous noise, and pretending great pain, deceives the compassionate, charitable, and well-disposed passengers, whom, when opportunity presents, he can recover his limbs to rob, and even murder, if resisted.

PALL-MALL. A game, thus described by Cotgrave, "A game wherein a round box bowle is with a mallet strucke through a high arch of yron (standing at either end of an ally one) which he that can do at the fewest blowes, or at the number agreed on, winnes." See Mall (4). James I. mentions palle maillé among the exercises to be used moderately by Prince Henry. "Pale maille a game wherein a round bowle is with a mallet struck through a high arch of iron, standing at either end of an alley, which he that can do at the fewest blows, or at the number agreed on, wins. This game is used at the long alley near St. James's, and vulgarly called Pell-Mell," Blount's Gloss. ed. 1681. p. 463.

PALL-WORK. Rich or fine cloth, work made of palle, q. v. See Degrevant, 629.

PALM. (1) Properly exotic trees of the tribe palmacea; but among our rustics, it means the catkins of a delicate species of willow gathered by them on Palm Sunday. "Palme, the yelowe that groweth on wyllowes, chatton," Palsgrave, 1530.
(2) The broad part of a deer's horn, when full grown. (Gent. Rec.) Palmed-deer, a stag of full growth.

PALM-BARLEY. A kind of barley fuller and broader than common barley.

PALMER. (1) Properly, a pilgrim who had visited the Holy Land, from the palm or cross which he bore as a sign of such visitation; but Chaucer seems to consider all pilgrims to foreign parts as palmers, and the distinction was never much attended to in this country.

> Says John, if I must a begging go,
> I will have a palmer's weed,
> With a staff and a coat, and bage of all sort,
> The better then I may speed.
> Robin Hood, ii. 129.

(2) A wood-louse. "A worme having a great many feete," Hollyband's Dictionarie, 1593.
(3) A stick or rod.

PALMING-DICE. A method of cheating at dice, formerly in vogue, by secreting one of the dice in the palm of the hand instead of putting in the box, and then causing it to fall with the other, the number of the former of course being guided by the hand. Hence the expression to palm anything upon one.

PALM-PLAY. Tennis. (Fr.)

PALPABLE. "Apte or mete to be felte, palpable," Palsgrave. See Macbeth, ii. 1.

PALPED. Obscured; darkened.

PALSTER. A pilgrim's staff.

PALTER. To hesitate; to prevaricate. I nc. "To haggle, hucke, dodge, or paulter long in the buying of a commoditie," Cotgrave. "Most of them are fixed, and palter not their place of standing," Harrison's England, p. 182.

PALTERLY. Paltry. North.

PALTOCK. A kind of doublet or cloak which descended to the middle of the thigh. (A.-N.) Cotgrave explains palletoc, "a long and thicke pelt or cassocke; a garment like a short cloake with sleeves, or such a one as the most of our moderne pages are attired in." The paltock was worn by priests, Piers Ploughman, p. 438; and in the Morte d'Arthur, i. 149, Gawayne says he attended Arthur "to poynte his paltockes that longen to hymself." Palsgrave has, "paltocke of lether, pellice; paltocke a garment, halcret; paltocke a patche, palleteau." The second meaning apparently refers to some defensive garment. Paltock seems also to have been applied to some ornament or ornamental cap worn on the head of a person high in authority.

PALTRING. A worthless trifle. "Triflings, paltrings not worth an old shoe," Florio, p 100. Forby has paltry, rubbish, refuse.

PALVEISE. A shield. See Florio. p 353.

PALY. A roll of bran such as is given to hounds. "Paly of bryn, cantabrum," Pr. Parv. "Cantabrum, furfur caninum, quo canes pascuntur," Papias. See Ducange.

PALYNGE. Turning pale. (A.-N.)

> For in here face alwey was the blode,
> Withoute palynge or eny drawynge doune.
> Lydgate, MS Ashmole 39, f. 47.
> For in hire face alwey was the blode,
> Withoute palynge or any drawynge doun.
> Ibid. MS. Soc. Antiq. 134, f. 8.

PAM. The knave of clubs.

PAME. (1) The mantle thrown over an infant who is going to be christened. West.

(2) The palm of the hand. West.

PAMMY. Thick and gummy; applied to the legs of such individuals as are at times said to have beef down to the hocks. Linc.

PAMPE. To pamper; to coddle.

PAMPERING. "The craft of pampering or setting out saleable things," Howell, 1660.

PAMPESTRIE. Palmistry.

PAMPILION. A coat of different colours, formerly worn by servants. It occurs with this explanation in Hollyband's Dictionarie, 1593. There was a kind of fur so called.

PAMPINATION. Pulling leaves that grow too thick. List of old words prefixed to Batman uppon Bartholome, 1582.

PAMPLE. (1) To indulge. North.

(2) To toddle, or pad about. East.

PAMPRED. Pampered; made plump.

PAN. (1) To unite; to fit; to agree. North. Douce gives the following proverb in his MS. Additions to Ray—

> Weal and women cannot pan,
> But wo and women can.

(2) Hard earth, because, like a pan, it holds water and prevents it from sinking deeper. East. Is this the meaning in Ben Jonson, v. 43?

(3) The skull; the head. (A.-S.)

> That he ne smot his hed of thanne,
> Whereof he tok awey the panne.
> Gower, MS. Soc. Antiq. 134, f. 54.

PANABLE. Likely to agree. North.

PANACHE. The plume of feathers on the top of a helmet. (A.-N.)

PANADE. A kind of two-edged knife. (A.-N.) Misread pavade by Tyrwhitt. See Wright's Anecdota Literaria, p. 24.

PANADO. A caudle of bread, Florio, p. 353. Currants, mace, cinnamon, sack, and sugar, with eggs, were added to complete the caudle. There were different ways of making it.

> To make a Ponado.
> The quantity you will make set on in a posnet of fair water; when it boils put a mace in and a little piece of cinnamon, and a handful of currans, and so much bread as you think meet; so boil it, and season it with salt, sugar and rose-water, and so serve it.
> A True Gentlewomans Delight, 1676, p. 74.

Another receipt, which differs somewhat from this, may be worth giving.

> To make Panado after the best fashion.
> Take a quart of spring-water, which, being hot on the fire, put into it slices of fine bread, as thin as may be; then add half a pound of currans, a quarter of an ounce of mace; boil them well, and then season them with rose-water and fine sugar, and serve them up.
> The Accomplished Ladies Rich Closet, 1706, p. 74.

PANARY. A storehouse for bread.

PANCAKE-TUESDAY. Shrove-Tuesday, which is a pancake feast day in all England. At Islip, co. Oxon, the children of the cottagers go round the village on that day to the different houses to collect pence, singing these lines—

> Pit-a-pat, the pan is hot,
> We are come a-Shroving.
> A little bit of bread and cheese
> Is better than nothing.
> The pan is hot, the pan is cold!
> Is the fat in the pan nine days old?

PANCHEON. A large broad pan. East.

PANDOULDE. A custard. Somerset.

PANE. (1) A division; a side; a piece. "A pane, piece, or pannell of a wall, of wainscot, of a glasse window," Cotgrave. "Pane of a wall, pan de mur," Palsgrave. The term is still in use, applied to a division in husbandry work.

> In the West part of the same gate and the way into the college, on the North pane eight chambers for the poore men, and in the West pane 6 chambers.
> Nichols' Royal Wills, p. 300.

(2) A hide or side of fur; fur. (A.-N.) "Pane of furre, panne; pane of gray furre, panne de gris," Palsgrave. "A pane of ermines," Ord. and Reg. p. 122. See Eglamour, 858; Gy of Warwike, p. 421. Pane has our first meaning in a pane or piece of cloth. "A pane of cloth, panniculus," Baret, 1580, an insertion of a coloured cloth in a garment. It seems to mean the skirt of a garment in Ywaine and Gawin, 204, and also in the following passage:

> She drouȝe his mantel bi the pane.
> Cursor Mundi, MS. Coll. Trin. Cantab. f. 28.
> Saying, him whom I last left, all repute,
> For his device, in handsoming a suit,

> Lambarde's Perambulation, 1596, p. 211.

PANNAM. Bread. A cant term. The following is a curious old canting song:

> The ruffin cly the nab of the harman-beck,
> If we mawned pannam, lap or ruff-peck,
> Or poplars of yarum; he cuts bing to the ruffmans,
> Or els he sweares by the light-mans
> To put our stamps in the harmans.
> The ruffian cly the ghost of the harman-beck,
> If we heave a booth, we cly the jerke.
> Dekker's Lanthorne and Candle-Light, 1620.

PANNEL. The treeless pad, or pallet, without cantle, with which an ass is usually rode. "Pannell to ryde on, batz, panneau," Palsgrave. See Tusser, p. 11.

PANNICLE. A membrane. (Lat.)

> The headeach either commeth of some inward causes, as of some cholerick humor, bred in the pannicles of the braine, or else of som outward cause, as of extream heat or cold, of some blow, or of some violent savour. Eumelus saith, that it commeth of raw digestion; but Martin saith most commonly of cold. Topsell's Beasts, 1607, p. 348.

PANNIER-MAN. A servant belonging to an inn of court, whose office is to announce the dinner. See Grose.

PANNIERS. To fill a woman's panniers, i. e. to get her with child. "Emplir une femelle, to fill her panniers, get her with yong," Cotgrave. The phrase is still in use.

PANNIKELL. The skull, or brain-pan. Spenser.

PANNIKIN. Fretting; taking on, as a sickly or wearisome child. Suffolk.

> Is now, forsooth, so proud, what else!
> And stands so on her pantables.
> Cotton's Works, 1734, p. 85.

> Plutarche with a caveat keepeth them out, not so muche as admitting the litle crackhalter that carrieth his master's pantables, to set foote within those doores. Gosson's Schoole of Abuse, 1579.

> Hee standeth upon his pantables, and regardeth greatly his reputation.
> Saker's Narbonus, 1580, 2d part, p. 99.

PANTALONE. A zany, or fool. (Ital.) In early plays, he generally appeared as a lean old man wearing spectacles. "A pantaloon or Venetian magnifico," Howell, 1660.

PANTALOONS. Garments made for merry-andrews, &c., that have the breeches and stockings of the same stuff, and joined together as one garment.

> Bring out his mallard, and eft-soons
> Beshake his shaggy pantaloons.
> Cotton's Works, 1734, p. 13.

PANTAS. A dangerous disease in hawks, whereof few escape that are afflicted therewith; it proceeds from the lungs being, as it were, baked by excessive heat, that the hawk cannot draw his breath, and when drawn cannot emit it again; and you may judge of the beginning of this evil by the hawk's labouring much in the pannel, moving her train often up and down at each motion of her pannel, and many times she cannot mute nor slice off; if she does, she drops it fast by her. The same distemper is also perceived by the hawk's frequent opening her clap and beak. Markham.

PANTER. A net, or snare. (A.-N.) "Panter, snare for byrdys," Pr. Parv. "The birdd was trapped and kaute with a pantere," Lydgate, p. 182. See Ashmole's Theat. Chem. Brit. 1652, p. 215; Apol. PARIS-GARDEN. "Paris Garden is the place on the Thames bank-side at London, where the bears are kept and baited; and was anciently so called from Robert de Paris, who had a house and garden there in Richard the Second's time; who by proclamation ordained that the butchers of London should buy that garden for receipt of their garbage and entrails of beasts; to the end the city might not be annoyed thereby," Blount's Glossographia, 1681, p. 473. Paris Garden seems to have been first employed as a place for baiting wild beasts as early as Henry VIII.'s time. See Collier's Annals of the Stage, i. 251. A dreadful accident which occurred there on January 13th, 1582-3, by the fall of some scaffolding, is alluded to by several contemporary writers. Dr. Dee, Diary, p. 18, thus mentions it,—"On Sonday the stage at Paris Garden fell down all at ones, being full of people beholding the bearbayting, many beingkilledthereby, more hart, and allamased. The godly expownd it as a due plage of God for the wickednes ther usid, and the Sabath day so profanely spent." Allusions to Paris Garden are very common; to its loud drum, to the apes, &c.

PARISHENS. Parishioners. (A.-N.)

Scot's Philomythie, 1616.

PASSADO. A term in fencing, meaning a pass or motion forwards.

PASSAGE. (1) A ferry. Devon.

(2) An old game at dice, thus described in the Compleat Gamester, ed. 1721, p. 67:—" Passage is a game at dice to be play'd at but by two, and it is performed with three dice. The caster throws continually till he has thrown doublets under ten, and then he is out and loses, or doublets above ten, and then he passes and wins; high runners are most requisite for this game, such as will rarely run any other chance than four, five, or six, by which means, if the caster throws doublets, he scarcely can throw out."

PASSAMEN. A kind of lace. (Fr.) In a parliamentary scheme, dated 1549, printed in the Egerton Papers, p. 11, it was proposed than no man under the degree of an earl be allowed to wear passamen lace.

PASSAMEZZO. A slow dance, very often corrupted to passa-measure, or passing-measure, and by Shakespeare to passy-measure. The long-disputed phrase passy-measures pavin has thus been explained, but it is in fact the name of an ancient dance, thus described in a MS. quoted by Mr. Collier in the Shak. Soc. Papers, i. 25, " two singles and a double forward, and two singles syde, reprynce back." It is only necessary to read this, and have seen a drunken man, to be well aware why Dick is called a " passy-measures pavin."

PASSANCE. A journey.

> Thus passed they their passance, and wore out the weerie way with these pleasant discourses and prettie posies.
> Saker's Narbonus, 1st part, 1580, p. 131.

PATRICK'S-PURGATORY. A celebrated cavern in Ireland, an eminent object of pilgrimages and superstitions. Its entire history is to be found in Mr. Wright's work so called, 8vo. 1844.

> They that repaire to this place for devotion his sake use to continue therein foure and twentie houres, which dooing otherwhile with ghostlie meditations, and otherwhile a dread for the conscience of their deserts, they saie they see a plaine resemblance of their owne faults and vertues, with the horror and comfort thereunto belonging, the one so terrible, the other so joious, that they verelie deeme hemselves for the time to have sight of hell and heaven. The revelations of men that went thither (S. Patrike yet living) are kept written within the abbeie there adjoining. When anie person is disposed to enter (for the doore is ever spard) he repaireth first for devise to the archbishop, who casteth all pericles and dissuadeth the pilgrime from the attempt bicause it is knowen that diverse entering into that cave, never were seene to turne backe againe. But if the partie be fullie resolved, he recommendeth him to the prior, who in like maner favourablie exhorteth him to choose some other kind of penance and not to hazard such a danger. If notwithstanding he find the partie fullie bent, he conducteth him to the church, injoineth him to begin with praier and fast of fifteene daies, so long togither as in discretion can be indured. This time expired, if yet he persevere in his former purpose the whole convent accompanieth him with solemne procession and benediction to the mouth of the cave, where they let him in, and so bar up the doore untill the next morning. And then with like ceremonies they await his returne and reduce him to the church. If he be seene no more they fast and praie fifteene daies after. Touching the credit of these matters, I see no cause, but a Christian being persuaded that there is both hell and heaven, may without vanitie upon sufficient information be resolved, that it might please God, at sometime, for considerations to His wisdome knowen, to reveale by miracle the vision of joies and paines eternall. But that altogither in such sort and by such maner, and so ordinarilie, and to such persons, as the common fame dooth utter, I neither beleeve nor wish to be regarded. I have conferd with diverse that had gone this pilgrimage, who affirmed the order of the premisses to be true; but that they saw no sight, save onelie fearefull dreams when they chanced to nod, and those they said were exceeding horrible. Further they added, that the fast is rated more or lesse, according to the qualitie of the penitent.

Stanihurst's Description of Ireland, ed. 1586, pp. 28-29.

PATRICO. A cant term among beggars for their orator or hedge priest. This character is termed patriarke-co in the Fraternitye of Vacabondes, 1575, "a patriarke-co doth make marriages, and that is untill death depart the married folke, which is after this sort: when they come to a dead horse or any dead catell, then they shake hands, and so depart every one of them a severall way."

PAULING. A covering for a cart or waggon. Linc. Qu. from palle?

PAUL'S. As old as St. Paul's, a common proverbial saying in Devon, and is found in old writers. The weathercock of Paul's is frequently referred to in early books. "I am as very a turncote as the wethercoke of Poles," Mariage of Witt and Wisdome, p. 24. A chronicle in MS. Vespas. A. xxv. under the reign of Henry VII. thus mentions it—

M. Kneisworth, mayir. Then came in dewke Phillip, of Burgon, agaynst his wille with tempast of wethir, as he was goyng into Spayn, whiche afterward was kyng of Castelle. Then was Polles wethir-cok blown doun.

Old St. Paul's was in former times a favorite resort for purposes of business, amusement, lounging, or assignations; bills were fixed up there, servants hired, and a variety of matters performed wholly inconsistent with the sacred nature of the edifice. "A poore siquis, such as forlorne forreiners use to have in Pauls Church," Hopton's Baculum Geodæticum, 4to. Lond. 1614.

In Powls hee walketh like a gallant courtier, where if hee meet some rich chuffes worth the gulling, at every word he speaketh hee makes a mouse of an elephant; he telleth them of wonders done in Spaine by his ancestors; where, if the matter were well examined, his father was but swabber in the ship where Civill oranges were the best merchandize; draw him into the line of history, you shall heare as many lies at a breath as would breed scruple in a good conscience for an age. Wits Miserie, 1596.

PAULTRING. Pilfering stranded ships. Kent.

PEAN. To strike or beat. Cumb.

PEAR-COLOURED. Red.

PEARK. To peep. Var. dial.

PEARL. (1) This term was metaphorically applied to anything exceedingly valuable.

(2) White spots in the eyes were called pearls. See Harrison's England, p. 234. According to the Dictionarium Rusticum, pearl, pin, and web, or any unnatural spot or thick film over a horse's eye, comes from some stroke or blow given him, or from descent of the sire, or dam; the pearl being known by a little round, thick, white spot, like a pearl, from which it had its name, growing on the sight of the eye. Among hunters, pearl is that part of a deer's horn which is about the burr.

PEARL-COATED. A sheep with a curled fleece is said to be pearl-coated. North.

PEARLINS. Coarse bone-lace.

PEART. Brisk; lively. Var. dial.

Give your play-gull a stoole, and my lady her foole,
And her usher potatoes and marrow,
But your poet were he dead, set a pot on his head,
And he rises as peart as a sparrow.
Brit. Bibl. ii. 167.

Then, as a nimble squirrill from the wood,
Ranging the hedges for his filberd food,
Sits peartly on a bough his browne nuts cracking.
Browne's Britannia's Pastorals, p. 135.

PEAS-AND-SPORT. See Scadding-of-Peas.

PEAS-BLOSSOM-DAMP. A damp in coal-pits less noisome than ordinary damps.

PEASCOD. "I remember the wooing of a peascod instead of her," &c. Shakespeare. "The efficacy of peascods in the affairs of sweethearts is not yet forgotten among our rustic vulgar. The kitchen maid, when she shells green pease, never omits, if she finds one having nine pease, to lay it on the lintel of the kitchen door, and the first clown who enters it, is infallibly to be her husband, or at least her sweetheart," Mr. Davy's MS. Suffolk Gloss. Anderson mentions a custom in the North, of a nature somewhat similar. A Cumbrian girl, when her lover proves unfaithful to her, is, by way of consolation, rubbed with pease-straw by the neighbouring lads; and when a Cumbrian youth loses his sweetheart, by her marriage with a rival, the same sort of comfort is administered to him by the lasses of the village. "Winter time for shoeing, peas-cod time for wooing," old proverb in MS. Devon Gl. The divination by peascods alluded to by Mr. Davy is thus mentioned by Gay,—

As peascods once I pluck'd, I chanc'd to see
One that was closely fill'd with three times three;
Which, when I cropp'd, I safely home convey'd,
And o'er the door the spell in secret laid;
The latch mov'd up, when who should first come in,
But, in his proper person,—Lubberkin!

But perhaps the allusion in Shakespeare is best illustrated by the following passage, which seems to have escaped the notice of all writers on this subject,—

The peascod greene oft with no little toyle
Hee'd seeke for in the fattest fertil'st soile,
And rend it from the stalke to bring it to her,
And in her bosome for acceptance wooe her.
Browne's Britannia's Pastorals, p. 71.

PEASE. (1) To issue from a puncture in globules resembling peas. Somerset.

(2) To appease.

The ten commandments bring no man to perfection, and are nothing less than able to pease the divine wrath. Becon's Works, p. 49.

A Treatyse of a Galaunt, n. d.

PECTORAL. Armour for the breast. The term was also applied to a priest's stole. The second meaning of pectorale given by Ducange is rationale, stola pontificalis.

PECULIAR. A mistress. Grose.

PECUNIALL. Belonging to money.

It came into hys hed that the Englyshmen did litle passe upon the observacion and kepynge of penall lawes or pecuniall statutes, made and enacted for the preservacion of the commen utilytee and wealthe. Hall, Henry VII. f. 57.

PECUNIOUS. Money-loving.

PECURIOUS. Very precise. East.

PED. A species of hamper without a lid, in which mackerel are hawked about the streets. East. Moor tells us, in Norwich an assemblage whither women bring their small wares of eggs, chickens, &c. to sell, is called the Ped-market. Ray says, "Dorsers are peds or panniers carried on the backs of horses, on which higglers used to ride and carry their commodities. It seems this homely but most useful instrument was either first found out, or is the most generally used, in this county (Dorset), where fish-jobbers bring up their fish in such contrivances, above an hundred miles, from Lime to London." In his North-country words he has "a whisket, a basket, a skuttle, or shallow ped." Tusser uses ped, ed. 1812, p. 11. Holme, 1688, has explained it an angler's basket.

PEDAILE. Footmen. Hearne.

PEDANT. A teacher of languages.

PED-BELLY. A round protuberant belly, like a ped, q. v. East.

PEDDER. (1) A pedlar. Var. dial. Forby explains it, one who carries wares in a ped, pitches it in open market, and sells from it.

PEEPER. An egg-pie. Devon.

PEEPING-TOM. A nickname for a curious prying fellow, derived from an old legendary tale, told of a tailor of Coventry, who, when Godiva Countess of Chester, rode at noon quite naked through that town, in order to procure certain immunities for the inhabitants (notwithstanding the rest of the people shut up their houses) slily peeped out of his window, for which he was miraculously struck blind. His figure, peeping out of a window, is still kept up in remembrance of the transaction, and there is an annual procession yet held at Coventry, in which the feat of Lady Godiva is attempted to be represented, without violating the principles of public decency. A newspaper of last year tells us that,—

> The Godiva procession at Coventry was celebrated with much pomp last week. The lady selected for the occasion (who was a handsome-looking woman, and conducted herself with great propriety) was very differently habited from the great original she personated, being clad, from shoulder to feet, in close-fitting woven silk tights. Over this was placed an elegant pointed satin tunic, fastened by an ornamental girdle. Two handsome lace scarfs formed the body, and was fastened underneath each arm to a blonde Polka edged with gold. A zephyr's wing, in folds, descended from the shoulders, and was fastened on the bosom by a rich brooch, attached to which was a white cord and gold tassels. The head gear consisted of a pearl coronet, surmounted by a large plume of white ostrich feathers.—The procession was obliged, by a heavy shower of rain, to beat a premature retreat.

PEEPY. Sleepy; drowsy. Go to peepy-by, i. e. to sleep. Var. dial.

Where he was borne withoute more delay.
Lydgate, MS. Ashm. 39, f. 49.

PHÆBE. The name of a dance mentioned in an old nursery rhyme. A correspondent gives me the following lines of a very old song, the only ones he can recollect:

Cannot you dance the Phæbe?
Don't you see what pains I take;
Don't you see how my shoulders shake?
Cannot you dance the Phæbe?

PHANTASIED. Fancied.

This wydow founde suche grace in the kynges eyes that he not only favoured her suyte, but muche more phantasied her person. Hall, Edward IV. f. 5.

PHILANDERING. Making love.

PHILIP. The common hedge-sparrow, still so termed. It occurs in Middleton's Works, iii. 388.

PHILIP-AND-CHENEY. A kind of stuff, formerly much esteemed. See Nares.

Alasse, what would our silken mercers be?
What could they doe, sweet hempseed, but for thee?
Rash, taffata, paropa, and novato,
Shagge, fillizetta, damaske, and mockado,
No velvets piles, two piles, pile and halfe pile,
No plush or grograines could adorne this ile,
No cloth of silver, gold, or tisue here;
Philip and Cheiny never would appeare.
Taylor's Workes, 1630, iii. 64.

PHILISTINES. A cant term applied to bailiffs, sheriffs' officers, and drunkards.

PHILOSOPHER'S-EGG. The name of a medicine for the pestilence, described in MS. Sloane 1592, f. 151.

PIANOT. A magpie. North.

PICARO. A rogue. (Span.) Picaroon is, perhaps, the more usual form.

PICCADEL. Is thus described by Blount, "the round hem or the several divisions set together about the skirt of a garment or other thing; also, a kind of stiff collar, made in fashion of a band. That famous ordinary near St. James's called Pickadilly took denomination from this, that one Higgins a taylor, who built it, got most of his estate by piccadilles, which in the last age were much in fashion," Glossographia, ed. 1681, p. 495. Minsheu describes it as "a peece fastened about the top of the coller of a doublet," ed. 1627, p. 546, and Cotgrave, "the severall divisions or peeces fastened together about the brimme of the collar of a doublet." In Middleton, v. 171, the term is apparently to the implement used by the tailor in the making of the piccadel. See Mr. Cunningham's notes to Rich's Honestie of this Age, p. 74. The piccadel was made so that it could be taken off at the pleasure of the wearer.

And in her fashion she is likewise thus,
In every thing she must be monstrous;
Her picadell above her crowne up beares,
Her fardingale is set above her eares.
Drayton's Poems, p. 235.

PIKY. A gipsey. Kent.

PIL. A heavy club. North.

PILCH. An outer garment, generally worn in cold weather, and made of skins of fur. "Pelicium, a pylche," Nominale MS. The term is still retained in connected senses in our dialects. "A piece of flannel or other woollen put under a child next the clout is in Kent called a pilch; a coarse shagged piece of rug laid over a saddle for ease of a rider is in our midland parts called a pilch," MS. Lansd. 1033. "Warme pilche and warme shon," MS. Digby 86. In our old dramatists, the term is applied to a buff or leather jerkin, and Shakespeare has pilcher for the sheath of a sword.

Wha so may noghte do his dede, he salle to park,
Barefote withowttene schone, and ga with lyarde.
Take hym unto his pilche, and to his pater noster,
And pray for hym that may do, for he es bot a wastur.
MS. Lincoln A. i. 17, f. 148.

> To th' utmost of my poor ability,
> Who art great Jove's sister and wife,
> It were e'en pity of my life.
> Cotton's Poetical Works, 1734, p. 7

PITYFULL. Compassionate. Palsgrave.

PIX. (1) To glean orchards. West.

(2) The box or shrine in which the consecrated wafers were kept. Hence is said to be derived the phrase please the pigs.

(3) A name given to the custom of the goldsmiths of London making a trial of the public coin by weighing it before the privy council. See a long paper by Mr. Black in the Journal of the British Archæological Association, i. 128, and Blount's Gloss.

PIXLIQUID. A kind of oil.

PIXY. A fairy. The term is not obsolete, and like fairy, is common in composition. Pixy-puff, a broad species of fungus. Pixy-rings, the fairy circles. Pixy-seats, the entangled knots in horses' manes. Pixy-stool, the toadstool. "Pyxie-led, to be in a maze, to be bewilder'd, as if led out of the way by hobgoblin, or puck, or one of the fairies; the cure is to turn one of your garments the inside outward, which gives a person time to recollect himself: the way to prevent it, some say, is for a woman to turn her cap inside outward, that the pyxies may have no power over her, and for a man to do the same with some of his clothes," MS. Devon Gl.

> Thee pixie-led in Popish piety,
> Who mak'st thyself the triple crowns base drudge.
> Clobery's Divine Glimpses, 1659, p. 73.

PIZE. (1) Fretful; peevish. West.

(2) A kind of oath. "What the pize ails them," Whiter's Specimen, 1794, p. 19.

PIȜT. Placed; reared.

> He led hym forth upon that pleyne,
> He was war of a pynapulle piȝt;
> Sechan had he never seyne,
> Off clothes of gold burnysshed briȝt.
> MS. Cantab. Ff. v. 48, f. 59

PLACARD. (1) A man's stomacher, which was frequently adorned with jewels; a kind of breast-plate.

> Some had the helme, the visere, the two baviers and the two plackardes of the same curiously graven and conningly costed.
> Hall, Henry IV. f. 12

(2) A printed sheet, folded so as to form a little quarto book.

PLACE. (1) A house, or residence. (2) A barton. (3) A jakes. Var. dial.

(4) The pitch of a hawk or other bird of prey. See Macbeth, ii. 4.

PLACEAN. Places. Leic.

PLACEBO. To sing placebo, i. e. to endeavour to curry favour.

PLACIDIOUS. Gentle; placid.

> There was never any thing more strange in the nature of dogs, then that which hapned at Rhodes besieged by the Turke, for the dogges did there descerne betwixt Christians and Turkes; for toward the Turkes they were most eager, furious, and unappeasable, but towards Christians, although unknowne, most easie, peaceable, and placidious.
> Topsell's Four-Footed Beasts, 1607, p. 158.

PLACINACION. Satisfaction; atonement. This word occurs in a curious macaronic poem, of which there are copies in MSS. Harl. 536 and 941, and a fragment in MS. Harl. 218, f. 32. (Lat. Med.)

PLACING. Going out to service. North.

PLACK. (1) A piece of money. Cumb.

(2) A portion or piece of anything, a piece of ground, a portion of labour, &c. West.

PLACKET. A woman's pocket. Still used in this sense, according to Forby, ii. 255. It was metaphorically applied to the female pudendum; and the penis was termed the placket-racket. This word has been so much misunderstood that I am compelled to be somewhat plain in defining it. Grose has placket-hole, a pocket-hole. Nares, Dyce, and other writers, tell us a placket generally signifies a petticoat, but their quotations do not bear out this opinion. According to Moor, the term is in some places applied to a shift.

> Deliro playing at a game of racket,
> Far put his hand into Florinda's placket;
> Keep hold, said shee, nor any further go,
> Said he, just so, the placket well will do.
> Select Collection of Epigrams, 1665.

PLAD. Played. Somerset.

PLADDE. Pleaded.

> And long for hit forsothe he pladde.
> Chron. Vilodun. p. 108.

PLAGES. The divisions of the globe.

PLAGGIS. Cowslips. Arch. xxx. 411.

PLAGUY. Very. Var. dial.

PLAIFAIER. A playfellow.

> In so muche that for imprisonmente of one of his wanton mates and unthriftie plaifaiers he strake the chiefe justice with his fiste on the face.
> Hall's Union, Henry V. f. 1.
> He left the conseyle of theise olde wyse menys, and dede after the consel of chyldrin that weryn his pleyferyn.
> Wimbelton's Sermon, 1388, MS. Hatton, 57, p. 11.

PLAIN. (1) Middling. Dorset. "How's your wife to day." "Oh, very plain, thankee, sir."

(2) To complain. North.

(3) An open space surrounded by houses nearly answering to the Italian Piazza. In the city of Norwich there are several: as St. Mary's Plain, the Theatre Plain, &c.

(4) A field. Palsgrave.

(5) Simple; clear. Also, clearly.

> Lorde, the unkyndnes was shewid to kynge Edward that day,
> At his londyng in Holdyrnes he had grett payne,
> His subjectes and people wolde not hym obey,
> Off hym and his people thay had grett disdayn;
> There schewed hym unkyndnes and answerid hym playne,
> As for kynge he shulde not londe there for wele ne woo;
> Yett londid that gentill prynce, the will of God was soo!
> MS. Bibl. Reg. 17 D. xv

(6) Play; sport. Weber.

(7) A kind of flannel.

PLAIN-DEALING. A game at cards.

PLAIN-SONG. Simple melody.

> Our life is a plain-song with cunning pen'd,
> Whose highest pitch in lowest base doth end.
> The Return from Parnassus, p. 277

PLAINT. A complaint.

> How miserable's he who in his mind
> A mutiny against himself must find!
> Justly this Spirit doth our plaints provoke,
> So insupportable that makes our yoak;
> That presseth our assent above the skie,
> Though we are made of earth, and cannot flie.
> MS. Poems, xvii. Cent.
> From the zeale of old Harry lock'd up with a whore,
> From waiting with plaints at the Parliament dore,
> From the death of a King without why or wherefore.
> Fletcher's Poems, p. 134.

PLAISE-MOUTHED. Small mouthed, like a plaice; and hence metaphorically used for primness or affectation.

PLAIT. A kind of small ship. Blount calls it "a hoy or water vessel."

PLANCH. To plash hedges. Staff.

PLANCHED. Boarded. Dorset. It is also an archaism. Planchen, boards. Devon. "Plancher made of bordes, planché," Palsgrave. Forby has plancher, a boarded floor; and Palmer gives planches, the planks of a flooring.

> The goodwife, that before had provided for afterclaps, had found out a privie place between two seelings of a plauncher, and there she thrust Lionello, and her husband came sweting. What news, quoth shee, drives you home againe so soone, husband? Marrye, sweet wife, quoth he, a fearfull dreame that I had this night, which came to my remembrance.
> Tarlton's Newes out of Purgatorie, p. 100.

PLANCHER. A plate. Norf.

PLANE. The shaft of a crossbow.

PLANET. Climate. North.

PLANETS. Rain falls in planets, when it falls partially and with violence. North. Forby has the phrase by planets, capriciously, irregularly, changeably.

PLANET-STRUCK. Paralytic. Linc. This phrase appears to have been formerly in use for any sudden and violent attack not known by a familiar appellation. "A blasting or planetstreeking," Florio, p. 44. According to Markham, horses are said to be planet-struck when there is a deprivation of feeling or motion, not stirring any of the members, but that they remain in the same form as when the beast was first struck. It comes to a horse sometimes by choler and phlegm superabundantly mixed together; sometimes from melancholy blood, being a cold and dry humour, which annoys the hinder part of the brain; sometimes of extraordinary heat or cold, or raw digestion striking into the veins suddenly; or lastly, from extreme hunger, occasioned by long fasting.

PLANISH. To cover anything, as a table, room, &c. with all sorts of articles untidily placed; as, when children have been playing together and a room is heaped up with their playthings. (Qu. from Plenish for Replenish?) Linc.

PLANT. (1) An aim. Middx.

(2) A club, or cudgel. Var. dial.

(3) The foot. See Jonson, vii. 194. To water one's plants, to shed tears.

PLANTING. A plantation. East.

PLASAD. In a fine condition. Exmoor.

PLASE. A palace. Spenser.

Ho ys more worthy withyn my plase?
Mystryst the never, man, for thy mysdede.
Pieces of Ancient Poetry, p. 43.

PLASH. (1) To lower and narrow a broad-spread hedge by partially cutting off the branches, and entwining them with those left upright. A rod cut half through, and bent down, is termed a plash.

(2) A pool of water; a large puddle. "Lacuna, a playche of water," Nominale MS.

Betwyx a plasche and a flode appone a flate lawnde.
Morte Arthure, MS. Lincoln, f. 83.

Roares, rages, foames, against a mountaine dashes,
And in recoile makes meadowes standing plashes.
Browne's Britannia's Pastorals, p. 53.

If thu drynke the halfe, thu shalt fynde it no scoff:
Of terryble deathe thu wylt stacker in the plashes.
Bale's Kynge Johan, p. 78.

At length, comming to a broad plash of water and mud, which could not be avoyded, I fetcht a rise, yet fell in over the anckles at the further end.
Kemp's Nine Daies Wonder, 1600.

PLASHY. "Plashy waies, wet under foot; to plash in the dirt, all plash'd, made wet and dirty; to plash a traveller, to dash or strike up the dirt upon him," MS. Lansd. 1033. "A wet or a plashie ground," Nomenclator, 1585, p. 382.

PLAT. (1) Plaited straw, of which bonnets are made. Linc.

(2) The mould-board of a plough. Norf.

(3) "I platte with claye, iardille," Palsgrave. "He platteth his butter upon his breed w^{t}. his thombe as it were a lytell claye," ibid.

(4) Place; situation. North.

PLOUGH. (1) Used for oxen kept to draw the plough, not for horses. (2) A wheel carriage drawn by oxen and horses.

PLOUGH-HALE. The handle of a plough.

PLOUGHING. The depth of a furrow.

PLOUGH-IRON. A ploughshare. Var. dial.

PLOUGHJAGS. Labourers begging on the first Monday after Twelfth-day, generally called Plough Monday. Linc.

PLOUGH-JOGGER. A ploughman. Norf.

On a Sunday, Tarlton rode to Ilford, where his father kept; and, dining with them at his sisters, there came in divers of the countrey to see him, amongst whom was one plaine countrey plough jogger, who said hee was of Tarlton's kin, and he called him cousin. Tarlton's Jests, 1611.

PLOUGH-LAND. As much land as one plough will till in a year. Pr. Parv.

PLOUGH-MONDAY. "The Monday next after Twelfth-day, on which day, in the North of England, the plowmen themselves draw a plough from door to door, and beg plow-money to drink, which, having obtained, they plow two furrows across in the base court, or other place near the houses. In other parts of England, if any of the plowmen, after their days work on that day, come to the kitchin-hatch with his goad or whip, and cry Cock in the pot before the maids say Cock on the dunghill, then they gain a cock for Shrove-Tuesday," Blount's Glossographia, ed. 1681, p. 501. Tusser thus alludes to this singular custom,—

Plough Munday, next after that Twelf-tide is past,
Bids out with the plough, the worst husband is last:
If plowman get hatchet, or whip to the skreene,
Maids loseth their cocke, if no water be seen.

PLOUGH-PADDLE. A small plate or paddle used for cleansing the plough. Var. dial.

PLOUGH-SOCK. A ploughshare. North.

PLOUGH-START. A plough handle. Palsgrave.

PLOUGH-STOTS. The procession of the plough-stots still continues in Yorkshire on the second Monday in the year, when a plough is drawn along without the share, preceded by a number of rustics decorated with ribands, and blowing a cow's horn.

PLOVER. A whore. An old cant term.

PLOW. A ploughed field. Suffolk.

PLOWDEN. "The case is altered, quoth Plowden," a very favourite old proverbial phrase. Plowden was an eminent lawyer in Queen Mary's time, who being asked what legal remedy there was against some hogs that trespassed on the complainant's ground, he answered, he might have very good remedy; but the other telling him they were his hogs, "Nay, then, the case is altered," quoth Plowden.

There Ployden in his laced ruff starch'd on edg
Peeps like an adder through a quickset hedg,
And brings his stale demur to stop the course
Of her proceedings with her yoak of horse;
Then fals to handling of the case, and so
Shews her the posture of her over-throw,
But yet for all his law and double fees
Shee'le bring him to joyn issue on his knees,
And make him pay for expedition too;
Thus the gray fox acts his green sins anew.
Fletcher's Poems, p. 182.

PLOWEFERE. Companion in play. (A.-S.)

RACINE. A root. (A.-N.)

RACK. (1) Light, thin, vapoury clouds; the clouds generally. Still in use in the Northern counties, and sometimes there applied to a mist. See the Archæologia, xxii. 373. "As the sunne shines through the rack," Du Bartas, p. 616. In some instances it appears to imply the motion of the clouds, and is so explained by Chapman in his translation of Homer. A disputed passage in which this word occurs, in the Tempest, iv. 1, "leave not a rack behind," merits special consideration. Our choice lays between considering it to mean a single fleeting cloud, or as a form of wrack or wreck. Mr. Hunter has expressed his belief that rack in the first sense is never used with the indefinite article, and unless the passage now given from Lydgate tends to lighten the objection, it seems to me to be absolutely fatal to the adopted reading. On the other hand, we have rack in the old folios of Beaumont and Fletcher, where the sense requires wreck. See Mr. Dyce's edition, vii. 137. On the whole, then, unless rack can elsewhere be found with the indefinite article, it appears safer to adopt wreck, which certainly agrees better with the context. Upton, Critical Observations, ed. 1748, p. 213, supposes it to mean a track or path, in which sense it is still used in the North. See our second meaning, and Brockett, who adopts Upton's explanation of the Shakespearian passage; but there is no good authority for anything of the kind, although Brockett is as decisive as if he had possessed the reading and knowledge of Gifford.

> As Phebus doeth at mydday in the southe,
> Whan every rak and every cloudy sky
> Is voide clene, so hir face uncouth
> Shall shewe in open and fully be unwry.
> Lydgate, MS. Ashmole 39, f 51.

> He bilefte also. MS. Laud. 108, f. 111.

RAGLER. An officer in South Wales who collected fines, &c.

RAGMAN. (1) The charter by which the Scots acknowledged their dependence on the English crown under Edward I. was popularly called a ragman roll ; and hence the term, with or without the last word, came to be applied to several kinds of written rolls and documents, especially if of any length. Thus a papal bull with many seals is termed a rageman in Piers Ploughman, p. 5 ; and the list of names in Fame's book is called ragman roll in Skelton, i. 420. See also Plumpton Corr. p. 168. In a letter of Henry IV. dated 1399, printed in Rymer, mention is made of literas patentes vocata raggemans sive blank chartres. In Piers Ploughman, p. 461, it seems to mean a person who made a list o ragman.

> Rede on this ragmon, and rewle yow theraftur.
> MS. Cantab. Ff. v. 48, f. 7.

Mayster parson, I marvayll ye wyll gyve lycence
To this false knave in this audience
To publish his ragman rolles with lyes.
The Pardoner and the Frere, 1533.

(2) An ancient game at which persons drew by chance poetical descriptions of their characters, the amusement consisting, as at modern games of a similar kind, in the peculiar application or misapplication of the verses so selected at hazard by the drawers. This meaning of the term was first developed by Mr. Wright in his Anecdota Literaria, 8vo. 1844, where he has printed two collections of ancient verses used in the game of ragman. Mr. Wright conjectures that the stanzas were written one after another on a roll of parchment, that to each stanza a string was attached at the side, with a seal or piece of metal or wood at the end, and that, when used, the parchment was rolled up with all the strings and their seals hanging together, so that the drawer had no reason for choosing one more than another, but drew one of the strings by mere chance, on which the roll was opened to see on what stanza he had fallen: if such were the form of the game, we can very easily imagine why the name was applied to a charter with an unusual number of seals attached to it, which when rolled up would present exactly the same appearance. Mr. Wright is borne out in his opinion by an English poem termed Ragmane roelle, printed from MS. Fairfax 16:

My ladyes and my maistresses echone,
Lyke hit unto your humbyble wommanhede,
Resave in gré of my sympill persone
This rolle, which withouten any drede
Kynge Ragman me bad me sowe in brede,
And cristyned yt the merour of your chaunce;
Drawith a strynge, and that shal streight yow leyde
Unto the verry path of your governaunce.

That the verses were generally written in a roll may perhaps be gathered from a passage in Douglas's Virgil,—

With that he raucht me ane roll: to rede I begane,
The royetest ane ragment with mony ratt rime.

Where the explanation given by Jamieson seems to be quite erroneous.

Venus, whiche stant withoute lawe,
In non certeyne, but as men drawe
Of Ragemon upon the chaunce,
Sche leyeth no peys in the balaunce
Gower, MS. Soc. Antiq. 134, f. 244.

RAPIER-DANCE. This is nearly the same as the sword-dance among the ancient Scandinavians, or as that described by Tacitus among the Germans. The performers are usually dressed in a white frock, or covered with a shirt, to which as also to their hats, or paper helmets, are appended long black ribands. They frequently go from house to house, about Christmas, and are treated with ale after their military exercise. At merry-nights, and on other festive occasions, they are introduced one after another by the names and titles of heroes, from Hector and Paris, princes of Troy, down to Guy of Warwick. A spokesman then repeats some verses in praise of each, and they begin to flourish the rapier. On a signal given, all the weapons are united, or interlaced, but soon withdrawn again, and brandished by the heroes, who exhibit a great variety of evolutions, being usually accompanied by slow music. In the last scene, the rapiers are united round the neck of a person kneeling in the centre, and when they are suddenly withdrawn, the victim falls to the ground; he is afterwards carried out, and a mock funeral is performed with pomp, and solemn strains. Willan's Yorksh.

RING-FENCE. A property situated compactly together is said to be in a ring-fence.

RING-FINGER. The finger on which the ring is placed in marriage. The Romish Church encouraged the notion of immediate intercourse between the heart and the ring-finger. In the Hereford, York, and Salisbury Missals, the mystical ring is directed first to be put on the thumb, then upon the first, then upon the second, and lastly, on the third finger, where it is to remain, quia in illo digito est quædam vena procedens usque ad cor.

> As for the ring-finger, which is so called, because commonly a ring is worn on it, especially on the left hand, the physitians and anatomists give the reason of it, because in the finger there is a sinew very tender and small that reaches to the heart; wherefore it ought to wear a ring as a crown for its dignity. But besides observe, that in the ceremonies of marriage, they first put the matrimonial ring on the thumb, whence they take it, and put it on every one till they come to this, where it is left. Whence some who stood (as Durand in his Rational of Divine Offices) to discourse on these ceremonies, say it is done because that finger answers to the heart, which is the seat of love and the affections. Others say, because it is dedicated to the sun, and that most rings are of gold, a mettal which is also dedicated to it: so that by this sympathy it rejoyces the heart.
> Sanders' Chiromancy, 1652.

RING-HEAD. An engine used in stretching woollen cloth. Blount.

(4) A measure of twenty feet. Devon.

(5) A bundle of twigs laid over a gutter instead of a plank. Devon.

ROPE-PULLING. The ancient custom of rope-pulling is always strictly observed in Ludlow on Shrove Tuesday. At about four o'clock in the afternoon the rope is given out from the Town-hall by the Mayor, on whom this important duty by right devolves. Immediately on the rope being let down from a window, an indescribable struggle and trial of strength commences between the denizens of the different wards, which is not concluded without an obstinate contention. There are afterwards ordinaries at the various inns, and pleasure and conviviality are the order of the day.

ROPER. (1) A rope-maker.

(2) A crafty fellow; a rogue.

ROPE-RIPE. Fit for hanging, a phrase applied to anything very wicked. "A rope-ripe-rogue ripe for the rope, or deserving the rope' Howell's Lex. Tet. 1660.

Alle ys the toon with the touther,
As a shyppe that ys turned with the rother.
MS. Harl. 1701, f. 31.

(2) A horned beast. "In Herefordshire the dung of such beasts is still called rother soyl," Kennett, MS. Lansd. 1033. According to Sharp's MS. Glossary, the word is current in Warwickshire, and he adds that the beast-market at Stratford-on-Avon is called the rother market. "It is the pasture lards the rother's sides," Shakespeare; the old editions reading brother's. For this emendation we are indebted to Mr. Singer, and is exceedingly ingenious, although it must at the same time be admitted that sense can be made of it as it stands in the original. "Bucerum pœcus, an hearde of rother beastes," Elyot, ed. 1559.

(3) Name of a river?

Drof of hors and gyl of fisch.

RUTTEN. (1) To snore. (A.-S.)

(2) A stick used in beating up porridge or batter. Yorksh.

RUTTER. (1) A directory to show the proper course of a vessel.

> I, Mr. Awdrian Gilbert, and John Davis, went by appointment to Mr. Secretary to Mr. Beale his howse, where onely we four were secret, and we made Mr. Secretarie privie of the N. W. passage, and all charts and rutters were agreed uppon in generall. Dr. Dee's Diary, p. 18.

(2) Properly, a rider or trooper, from the German; but the term was usually applied to a fine, dashing, boasting gallant; one so fashionable as to speak much in foreign languages.

> Some authors have compared it to a rutter's codpiece, but I like not the allusion so well, by reason the tyings have no correspondence; his mouth is allwaies mumbling, as if hee were at his mattens; and his beard is bristled here and there like a sow. Lodge's Wit's Miserie, 1596.

RUTTING-TIME. Time of copulation.

> They have but one braunch growing out of the stem of their horne, which is not bigger then a mans finger, and for this cause, in the rutting-time, when they joyne with their females, they easily overcome the vulgar hart, with his branched and forked hornes. Topsell's Four-Footed Beasts, 1607, p. 122.

RUTTLE. To rattle. Var. dial.

RUȜE. Rye. Wright's Pol. Songs, p. 152.

RYE. A disease in hawks which causes the head to swell.

RYNGSED. Cleansed; renovated. This occurs in MS. Bib. Reg. 12 B i. f. 75.

RYNT. "Rynt ye, by your leave, stand handsomly; as, rynt you, witch, quoth Besse Locket to her mother," Ray's Words, ed. 1674, p. 39. The older form of this word is aroint (q. v.) and its proper explanation is of so much importance, that I am tempted to give the following extract from a MS. communication transmitted to me by a native of Lancashire. "The word roint is, or was thirty years ago, a common Lancashire provincialism. I have heard it used, scores and scores of times, in a sense I will presently state. But first as to its orthography; if I had never seen the word, and been asked to spell it from hearing it pronounced, I should certainly have written roynt, for though to a southern the sound would be much more like rynt, yet one accustomed to the dialect would know that the o was not altogether lost, any more than it is in royal, loyal, boy, which are pronounced in a somewhat similar way; the lost o to me has no difficulty in being distinguished as incorporated in the force given to the pronunciation of the r. Now as to the sense in which the word is applied, I must premise that in the part of the country in which I was born, it is usual (except in the summer season) to milk the cows in what is called a shippon; these shippons have what are called boosts (stalls similar to those in a stable, only wider, and the sides are lower); each boost accommodates two cows. When the milkmaid comes with her pail and stool, it frequently happens that the cow is standing close to the right hand division or partition of the boost, so that no space is left for her to plant her milkingstool; sometimes the cow obstinately resists gentle means used to induce her to move aside towards the left, when the milkmaid, losing her temper, uses the expression roynt ta, accompanied with a push against the side of the cow's rump, to force her to make the movement required. When used as a 'household' word, which it sometimes, though seldom, is, it denotes an angry and insulting mode of saying, 'stand aside, get out of my way,' or rather 'out of my gait.' This is the sense in which the proverb above given includes the expression."

Boucher, in v. Aroint, asserts that he has heard the word in Cheshire, but it was not always confined to that county. In Thoresby's letter to Ray, 1703, I find "Ryndta, used to cows to make them give way and stand in their stalls or booyses." This sufficiently confirms the explanation above given.

SA. (1) A large tub, or soe. "A saa or tebbe, tina," MS. Dict. A. D. 1540.

(2) A term in fencing?

> And as for single rapier, he values Monsieur with his sa, sa, as little as jack-pudding does a custard. Poor Robin's Visions, 1677, p. 15.

SAAG. Urine. Dorset.

SABATINES. Steel coverings for the feet; sometimes, slippers or clogs.

SACK. (1) To get the sack, to be turned off, or dismissed, a common expression with servants. Sack and seam road, a horse road.

(2) Sherry. The term was also given to any Spanish white wine. "Spanish wines, called sacke," Ord. and Reg. p. 300. A Malaga sweet wine was termed Canary sack. The term must not be confused with what is now termed sack, an entirely different wine.

(3) A loose upper garment; a kind of surtout. See Sac-friars. It was generally made of coarse materials, but Ben Jonson, ii. 465, mentions "the finest loose sacks the ladies use to be put in." Compare Peele, iii. 88, "Frumpton's wench in the frieze sacke," misprinted scake. "A sack, in Yorkshire, a shirt," Kennett, MS. Lansd. 1033.

SACK-BUT. A bass trumpet.

SACK-CIDER. A drink composed partly of sack and partly of cider.

SACKERSON. A famous bear kept at Paris Garden in Shakespeare's time. It is frequently mentioned by writers of that period.

SACKLE. To saunter about. Linc.

SACKLESS. Innocent; faultless; weak; simple; foolish. North.

SACK-POSSET. Was formerly eaten on the evening of the wedding-day, just before the company retired.

And then they did foot it and toss it,
Till the cook brought in the sack-posset,
The bride-pye was brought forth,
A thing of mickle worth,
And so all, at the bed-side,
Took leave of Arthur and his bride.

Song of Arthur of Bradley.

To make a sack-posset.

Take two quarts of pure good cream, a quarter of a pound of the best almonds, stamp them in the cream and boil amber and musk therein; then take a pint of sack in a bason, and set it on a chafing-dish till it be blood warm; then take the yolks of twelve eggs, with four whites, and beat them very well together: and so put the eggs into the sack, and make it good and hot; let the cream cool a little before you put it into the sack; then stir all together over the coals, till it be as thick as you would have it; if you take some amber and musk, and grind it small with sugar, and strew it on the top of the posset, it will give it a most delicate and pleasant tast.

A True Gentlewoman's Delight, 1676, p. 10.

SACK-WHEY. Wine-whey. Devon.

SACRAMENT. An oath. (Lat.)

SACRARYE. A sacred place. (A.-N.)

God ches thy wombe for his habitacle,
And halowid it so clene in every coste,
To make it sacrarye for his owen goost.

Lydgate, MS. Soc. Antiq. 134, f. 27.

SACRE. (1) To consecrate. (A.-N.)

(2) A sacred solemnity. Chaucer.

SAYNE. Saint. "Sayne Johan the Evaungelist," MS. Lincoln A. i. 17, f. 231.

SAYSLANG. A long pole; a stang. It occurs in Hollyband's Dictionarie, 1593. Also spelt saystang, which is perhaps the correct form

SAY-SO. A mere nominal advantage.

SAYSTE. Sawest. (A.-S.)

> Ther dwellyth a yeaunt in a foreste,
> Soche oon thou nevyr sayste are.
> MS. Cantab. Ff. ii. 38, f. 64.

SAYȜERDE. A sail-yard. Translated by antenna in MS. Dictionary, A.D. 1540.

SCAB. An ape; a baboon. Metaphorically, a poor worthless fellow.

> This kinde of flatt'ry makes a whore take state,
> Growes pocky pround, and in such port doth beare her,
> That such poore scabs as I must not come neere her.
> Taylor's Workes, 1630, ii. 111.

SCABBARD. A mangy scabby person.

SCABLINES. Chippings of stone. North.

SCABRIDGE. The plant scabious.

SCABY. Stingy; shabby. North.

SCADWYS. Shadows; shady places. Loca umbrosa in silvis, Anglice schadwys, MS. Bib. Reg. 12 B. i. f. 18.

SCAFE. To run up and down; to wander; to lead a scampish vagabondly life: thus they say, "An't ye ashamed of yesen, scafing up and down about the country." Linc.

SCAFFEL. A small spade or skuppet used in draining, and in out-hawling or feying narrow bottomed ditches. It differs from a spade in not tapering toward the edge, and in having its sides slightly turned up. It has a cot for the handle like a scuppit. I never heard the word but in Suffolk, nor saw it but in Tusser. Moor's Suffolk Words, p. 352.

SCAFFERON. Part of the ancient caparisonment of a horse, mentioned in Hall's Union, 1548, Hen. IV. f. 12.

SCAFFLE. To scramble. Somerset.

SCAFFLING. An eel. Chesh.

SCALBEGRES. Herba Cristofori. List of plants in MS. Sloane 5, f. 5.

SCALD. (1) Scabby, particularly in the head. Hence used for mean, shabby, disgusting. A person infected with lues venerea was said to be scalded.

> Other news I am advertised of, that a scald trivial lying pamphlet is given out to be of my doing.
> Pierce Penilesse, 1592.

(2) A multitude. East.

(3) A patch in a barley field scorched and withered up. East.

(4) To scorch. Norf.

SCALD-CREAM. Cream raised by heat. West.

SCALDING. Partial. Oxon.

SCALDRAG. One who boils rags.

> For to be a laundres imports onely to wash or dresse lawne, which is as much impeachment as to cal a justice of the peace, a beadle; a dyer, a scald-ragge; or a fishmonger, a seller of gubbins.
> Taylor, ed. 1630, ii. 165.

SCALE. (1) To spread; to disperse abroad. North. The term is an archaism. It is found in Hall, Richard III. f. 15, "sodenly scaled and departed." The word occurs in Coriolanus, i. 1, but is there a misprint for stale, as distinctly proved by Gifford, and still more elaborately in Dyce's Remarks, p. 158. The observations of Brockett on this passage, which he quite misunderstands, lead me to observe that, with a few trifling exceptions, the very worst annotations on Shakespeare have proceeded from the compilers of provincial glossaries, to whom the philological student would be more deeply indebted if they would confine themselves to the correct explanation of words in actual use, without entering into subjects that require a distinct range of reading and study.

(2) To weigh as in scales. "A scal'd pottle," a pottle of the right measure.

> Plague, not for a scal'd pottle of wine.
> The Honest Whore, i. 1.

(3) To throw at fruit on trees, as apples, walnuts, &c. South.

(4) To change. Dorset.

SCAM. A spot, or stain. North.

SCAMBLE. To scramble; to shift. "Scamblingly, catch that catch may," Cotgrave.

> Thus sithe I have in my voyage suffred wracke with Ulisses, and wringing-wett scambled with life to the shore, stand from mee, Nausicaä, with all thy traine, till I wipe the blot from my forhead, and with sweete springs wash away the salt froth that cleaves to my soule. Gosson's Schoole of Abuse, 1579.

SCAMBLED. Defeated; balked. West.

SCAMBLING. Sprawling. Heref.

SCAMBLING-DAYS. Days in Lent, when no regular meals were provided, but every one scrambled and shifted for himself as he could.

SCAME. To hurt, or injure.

SCAMELS. This word, which occurs in the Tempest, and is most probably a misprint, has baffled all annotators on Shakespeare. Seamell is the generally received reading, but cannot be correct on account of the quantity of the first syllable. Mr. Dyce conjectures staniels, but surely a trisyllable cannot be right. Read stannels, and we may perhaps have the true word. "A stannel, tinnunculus," Coles. If I recollect rightly, this was one of the conjectures proposed by Theobald.

SCAMINE. The scammony.

SCAMP. A great rascal. Var. dial.

SCAN. To scoff; to scold. Devon.

SCANDAL-BROTH. Tea. Var. dial.

SCANDRET. A drunkard. Worc. I give this word on the authority of an anonymous correspondent.

SCANT. Scarce; insufficient. Also an adverb, as in the following passage:

> And whan thei wil fighte, thei wille schokken hem togidre in a plomp; that ȝif there be 20,000 men, men schalle not wenen that there be scant 10,000. Maundevile's Travels, p. 252.

> For mine owne part, I live not in such want
> But that I eate and sleepe, though coyne be scant.
> Taylor's Workes, 1630, ii. 112.

SCANTELOUN. A carpenter's measure. See Romaunt of the Rose, 7114.

> Do we wel and make a tour
> With squyre and scanteloun so even.
> Cursor Mundi, MS. Coll. Trin. Cantab. f. 14.

> Soft, ser, seyd the skantyllȝon,
> I trow ȝour thryft be wele ny done;
> Ever to crewyll thou arte in word,
> And ȝet thou arte not worth a tord:
> Fore all the gode that thou gete myght,
> He wyll spend it on a nyght.
> MS. Ashmole 61, xv. Cent.

SCANTITY. Insufficiency. East.

SCANTLE. To become scanty.

> The chines of beefe in great houses are scantled to buie chains of gold; and the almes that was wont to releeve the poore, is husbanded better to buy new rebatoes. Lodge's Wit's Miserie, 1596.

SCANTLING. A portion of anything, generally meant as a specimen. "Scantlon of a clothe," Palsgrave. The size to which joiners intend to cut their stuff is called the scantling.

SCAPE. (1) A misdemeanour.

(2) To escape. (A.-S.)

> Johan toke the munkes horse be the hed,
> For sothe as I yow say;
> So did Much, the litulle page,
> For he shulde not scape away.
> MS. Cantab. Ff. v. 48, f. 129.

> xl. he had chaunged for oon,
> Ther skaped but two away.
> MS. Cantab. Ff. ii. 38, f. 74.

(3) A trick, shift, or evasion.

SCAPE-GALLOWS. A bad fellow, one who has narrowly escaped the gallows. Scape-grace, a hair-brained fellow. Scape-thrift, a thriftless fellow.

> Off fidlers, pedlers, fayle scape slaves,
> Of tinckers, turnecoates, tospot knaves,
> Of theifes and scapethrifts many a one,
> With bounsing Besse and jolly Joane,
> Of idle boyes and journeymen,
> And vagrants that the country runn.
> MS. Harl. 1221, f. 92.

SCAPELLAR. A narrow piece of cloth worn by monks over the rest of their dress, reaching almost to the feet. "Skapplers and cootes," Skelton's Works, ii. 420.

SCAPLOREY. A scapulary.

SCAPPLE. To rough-hew, generally applied to stones. See Craven Gl. ii. 101.

SCAR. (1) Exposed to. Sussex.

(2) To scare, or frighten. Linc.

(3) A scarecrow. Palsgrave.

(4) A bare and broken place on the side of a mountain, or in the high bank of a river. North. Ray explains it "the cliff of a rock, or a naked rock on the dry land," and thinks it is the origin of the name of Scarborough The definitions here given do not, however quite convey the ancient meaning of scar, which must be interpreted a precipice. "Verie deepe scarrie rockes," Harrison's Britaine, p. 93. Scarry, full of precipices, Craven Glossary, ii. 102. "A scar, cliff, mons præruptus," Coles. The passage in Shakespeare, "men make ropes in such a scarre," is difficult of explanation; but the old text, obscure as it is, is certainly to be preferred to any emendation yet proposed. Mr. Knight s explanation is nearly as difficult as the text, and although, as he remarks, Shakespeare is accustomed to the use of strong metaphorical expressions, yet we may fairly doubt whether, in the whole range of his plays, such an unnatural and forced construction is adopted as in the passage printed with Mr. Knight's punctuation. Looking fully at the context, I would explain it thus. Diana, at the moment of uttering this speech, is on the point of pretending to yield to Bertram's wishes; she has combated his assurances of sincerity in the vows of love, but apparently struck with the urgency of his arguments, she says, I see that men make ropes in such a scarre, that we'll forsake ourselves; I see that men make reasons to assist their views even in such a barren difficult subject, that we will desert ourselves, and yield to them. Then comes the result, "Give me that ring;" and no further solicitation is necessary on Bertram's part, who wins "a heaven on earth," by producing arguments for a course which no proper reasons could justify, in short, by making "ropes in such a scarre."

> He loked abowte; thanne was he warre
> Of an ermytage undir a skerre.
> MS Lincoln A. i. 17, f. 123.

> Marry, even heaved over the scarr, and sent a-swimming toward Burtholme, his old habitation, if it bee not intercepted by some seale, sharke, sturgeon, or such like. Hoffman, 1631.

(5) A shred, or piece. North.

SCARAB. A beetle. (Lat.)

> With secret contemplation doth contemne the baze minds of such as, with the scarab flye, delighteth only to live in dung and mire.
> Greene's Planetomachia, 1585, f. 1.

SCARAMOUCH. The name of a famous Italian posture-master, who in the year 1673 came to act here in England, from whom all those persons that perform feats of agility, and are dressed in particular Spanish habits, bear that as a common name. Dyche.

SCARBABE. A scarecrow. "And, like a scarbabe, make him take his legs," Wily Beguiled, ap. Hawkins, iii. 329.

SCARBOROUGH. Scarborough leisure, no leisure at all, Stanihurst's Ireland, p. 23. Scarborough warning, no warning, or a very brief one.

SCARBOT. A kind of beetle.

SCAR-BUGGE. A bugbear.

> For sinne is no scar-bugge, and wee shall one day finde it so. Dent's Pathway, p. 345.

SCARCE. (1) To sieve. Also, a sieve.

> Tak hert-horne, and brynne it, and bete it to powdir, and scarce it thorow a scarce, and use it ilk daye to thou be hale. MS. Lincoln A. i. 17, f. 292.

(2) Sparing; stingy. (A.-N.)

(3) To make one's self scarce, i. e. to go away. A common phrase.

SCARD. A shard, or fragment. Yorksh.

SCARE. (1) To spend; to consume. Suffolk.

(2) Lean; scraggy; scanty. East.

> Musarum Deliciæ, 1656, p. 6.

SCUM-FELLOW. A very low person.

SCUMMER. (1) Wonder. Somerset.

(2) To daub, or smear. West. Also, ventrem exonerare. "A skummering of a dog," Florio, p. 475, in v. Schinchimúrra.

(3) A fire-shovel. Yorksh.

SCUN. (1) To reproach in a public manner, with a view of exposing to contempt or shame. Somerset.

(2) To throw a stone. North.

(3) To shun; to avoid. Devon.

SCUNNER. (1) To loathe; to shun. North.

(2) To notice; to observe. Northumb.

SCUNNING. A disease of the heart.

SCUPPER'D. Spoken of leaves of trees that are turned black, and crumpled up with frost or blight. A Herefordshire word, according to Urry's MS. additions to Ray.

SCUPPIT. A shovel, or spade, of uniform width, the sides turned a little inward. A spade tapers toward the cutting edge. The tiller handles too differ, the scuppit having merely a cot on the top of the tiller, and the spade having the top of its tiller perforated, which is called an eye tiller. The scuppit is sometimes used for digging as well as the spade, but is not so suitable for flag or strong land. Moor.

SEABLE. Visible; to be seen.

SEA-BOTTLE. Many of the species of the sea-wrack, or fucus, are called sea-bottles, in consequence of the stalks having round or oval vesicles or pods in them; the pod itself.

SEA-CROW. A cormorant. South.

SEAKY. Boggy; wet. Salop.

SEAL. Part of horse armour.

SEALE. (1) The sallow. Yorksh.

(2) A furnace for boiling salt.

SEALED-DOVE. A dove with the eyelids sown up, in which state she rises perpendicularly till her strength is quite exhausted, and then falls down lifeless.

> Thy windows all are shut in this dark cave:
> Thy eyes clos'd up; and when, like sealed dove,
> Thou fain wouldst flutter upward, light to have,
> This flesh to thee united will not move,
> But draws thee back, and clips thy soaring wings,
> Or at thy lofti'st pitch thee downward flings.
> Clobery's Divine Glimpses, 1659, p 75.

SEAM. (1) A horse-load of wood. Ray gives this as a Sussex word, but it seems to have fallen out of use in that county. See, however, Marshall's Rural Economy of the West of England, i. 398, who gives it as a West Devonshire word.

(2) A strata of coal. North.

(3) Lard. North. "Cold meat fryed with hogs seame," Cotgrave in v. Gramouse. "Seme for to frye with, seyn de pourreau," Palsgrave.

> Whereas her fresh flourishing prime would brook ill to be imbraced by thy seere and saplesse armes.
> The Two Lancashire Lovers, 1640. p. 26.

(3) The touchhole of a pistol. Hence used metaphorically for the pudendum muliebre. Light of the seare is, of course, equivalent to light-heeled, loose in character. Tickle of the sear, wanton, immodest. The commentators have never yet satisfactorily explained a passage in Hamlet, ii. 2, "the clown shall make those laugh, whose lungs are tickled o' the sere," i. e., those whose lungs are wanton, or excited to laughter by coarse ribaldry. That this is the correct explanation there cannot, I imagine, be the slightest doubt. "Discovering the moods and humors of the vulgar sort to be so loose and tickle of the seare," Howard's Defensative, 1620, ap. Douce, ii. 230. These senses of the word have never before been developed.

> Even as a pistole that is ready charged and bent, will flie off by and by, if a man do but touch the seare. Lambarde's Perambulation, 1596, p. 452

> She that is fayre, lusty, and yonge,
> And can comon in termes wyth fyled tonge,

(13) The Deity is mentioned in the Towneley Mysteries, pp. 97, 118, as He that "sett alle on seven," i. e., set or appointed everything in seven days. A similar phrase at p. 85 is not so evident. It is explained in the glossary, "to set things in, to put them in order," but it evidently implies in some cases an exactly opposite meaning, to set in confusion, to rush to battle, as in the following examples. "To set the steven, to agree upon the time and place of meeting previous to some expedition," West. and Cumb. Dial. p. 390. These phrases may be connected with each other. Be this as it may, hence is certainly derived the phrase to be at sixes and sevens, to be in great confusion. Herod, in his anger at the Wise Men, says,—

Bot be thay past me by, by Mahowne in heven,
I shalle, and that in hy, set alle on sex and seven;
Trow ye a kyng as I wyll suffre thaym to neven
Any to have mastry bot myself fulle even.

(2) A conflict.

> For now is he holden nouȝt in shouris,
> But he con love paramouris.
> Cursor Mundi, MS. Coll. Trin. Cantab. f. 1.

SHOUT. (1) A hill. Yorksh.

(2) A small boat, nearly flat-bottomed and very light, used for passing over the drains in various parts of the county: when broader and larger it is used for shooting wild ducks in the marshes, and is then called a gunning shout. Linc. The term shoutemen has some connexion with this, although the boats used for carrying timber could not have been very light.

> Out of which 74*s.* 6*d.* paid to divers mariners, called shoutemen, for the carriage of 74 loads of timber from the wood of Wildwode, carried from Weybridge to the manor of the Savoye, by the river Thames, carriage at 12*d.* a load. Archæologia, xxiv. 304.

> And from two boats forfeited anew in this year, of which one dung-boat, called a showte, nothing here, because not yet appraised, but remaining in the custody of the accomptant of waifs and estrays.
> Archæologia, xxiv. 303.

SHOUTHER. The shoulder. Shouther-fellow, a companion in any manual labour requiring more than one person's exertions.

SHOVE. (1) To germinate; to shoot. Also, to cast the first teeth. East.

(2) To put the loose corn into heaps for the convenience of being taken up. Sussex.

SHOVELARDE. A shovel.

SHOVEL-BOARD. A trivial game very common in former days, and not yet laid aside. A shilling or other smooth coin was placed on the extreme edge of the shovel-board, and propelled towards a mark by a smart stroke with the palm of the hand. It is mentioned under various names, according to the coin employed, as shove-groat, &c. The game of shove-halfpenny is mentioned in the Times of April 25th, 1845, as then played by the lower orders. It is called shooyts in the Hallamshire Glossary, p. 121.

> Bowles, shove-groate, tennis, no game comes amis,
> His purse a nurse for anybody is.
> Taylor's Motto, 12mo. Lond. 1622.

Taylor, the water-poet, says that "Edw. shillings for the most part are used at shooveboord," and he thus describes the complaint of one of them:

> You see my face is beardlesse, smooth, and plaine,
> Because my soveraigne was a child, 'tis knowne,
> Whenas he did put on the English crowne.
> But had my stamp beene bearded, as with haire,
> Long before this it had beene worne out bare;
> For why? With me the unthrifts every day
> With my face downwards do at shove-boord play;
> That had I had a beard, you may suppose
> Th' had worne it off, as they have done my nose.
> Taylor's Workes, ed. 1630, i. 66

SHOVELL. The bird shoveller, mentioned in Hollyband's Dictionarie, 1593, where it is the translation of un cueillier. Perhaps shovelle-fotede is having feet like shovells.

> Schovelle-fotede was that schalke, and schaylande hyme semyde,
> With schankez unschaply schowande togedyrs.
> Morte Arthure, MS. Lincoln, f. 65.

SHOW. (1) To push, or shove. East.

(2) To show a fair pair of heels, i. e. to run away very quickly. Var. dial.

SHOW-FIGHT. To be willing to fight.

SHOW-HACKLE. To be willing to fight. I. of Wight.

SHOWHE. A jackdaw. Prompt. Parv.

SHOWL. A shovel. Var. dial. "Tribula, Anglice a schowle," Nominale MS.

> Who'll dig his grave?
> I, said the owl, with my spade and showl,
> And I'll dig his grave. The Death of Cock Robin.

SHOW-OFF. To commence. Also, to exhibit finely before others. Var. dial.

SHOWRLY. Surely. See Middleton, iii. 636. Jennings has shower, sure.

SHRADDES. Shards, or coppices.

> Whan shaws beene sheene, and shraddes full fayre,
> And leaves both large and longe. Robin Hood, i. 115.

SHRAF-TIDE. Shrovetide. Palsgrave.

SHRAGERS. Coarse metal pots made of marl in which wares are baked. Staff.

SHRAGGES. Rags; patches; slips. Our second example refers to a jagged hood.

> With flatte ferthynges the freke was floreschede alle over;
> Many schredys and schragges at his skyrttes hynges
> Morte Arthure, MS. Lincoln, f. [illegible]

A red hod on hir heved, shragid al of shridis,
With a riche riban gold be-gon.
MS. Arund. Coll. Arm. 27, f. 130

SHRAGS. The ends of sticks, of the birchen twigs in a broom; or of whins or furze. "Yar brum owt ta ha' fine shrags." This was said to a man about to dress recently thrashed barley for market. The clippings of live fences. Moor. "Hoke to hev wyth woode, or schraggynge," Pr. Parv. p. 242. "To shrag trees, arbores putare," Baret, 1580.

SHRAIL. A light rail, or any very slight fence, more to warn persons from breaking through it than for real protection. East.

SHRAMMED. Benumbed with cold. West.

SHRANK. Sunk; pierced. Gawayne.

SHRAP. (1) A thicket. Devon.

(2) A snare for birds; a place prepared and baited with corn or chaff for the purpose of catching birds.

He busies himselfe in setting silver lime twigs to entangle young gentlemen, and casting foorth silken shraps to catch woodcocks.
Nash's Pierce Pennilesse, 1592.

SHRAPE. (1) To scrape. (A.-S.)

Herly in the morowe to shrapyn in the vale,
To fynde my dyner amonge the wormes smale.
Lydgate's Minor Poems, p. 184.

(2) To scold. Sussex.

SHRAVEL. Dry faggot wood. Suffolk.

SHRAVEY. A loose subsoil, something between clay and sand. Sussex.

SHRED. (1) To cut off the smaller branches of a tree; to cut the twigs from a pole when cut down. East. It occurs in the Pr. Parv.

(2) To cut into shreds. West. "To morsell, to mince, or shred in peeces," Florio, p. 2. Metaphorically, to ruin or plunder any one.

(3) To spread manure. South.

(4) A tailor. A cant term.

SHREDE. (1) Clothed. Also, to clothe. (A.-S.)

Beves of is palfrei alighte,
And schrede the palmer as a knighte.
Beves of Hamtoun, p. 80.

In a kirtel of silk he gan him schrede,
Into chaumber wel sone he ȝede.
Gy of Warwike, p. 4.

(2) To cut through. (A.-S.)

Thoffe my schouldire be schrede, and my schelde thyrllede,
And the wielde of myne arme werkkes a littille.
Morte Arthure, MS. Lincoln, f. 81.

(3) Covered up. (A.-S.)

It ware worthy to be schrede and schrynede in golde,
For it es sakles of synne, sa helpe me oure Lorde.
Morte Arthure, MS. Lincoln, f. 95.

Schyre scheldus they schrede,
Many dowghty was dede,
Ryche maylus wexen rede. Degrevant, 293.

SHRED-PIES. Mince-pies. Tusser, p. 73.

SHREFE. A sheriff. Palsgrave.

The proverbe saies, hee that will sweare will lie,
He that will lie will steale by consequency:
Swearers are lyers, lyers most are thieves,
Or God helpe jaylors and true under-shrieves.
Taylor's Wit and Mirth, p. 189.

SHREG. To lop trees. Somerset.

SHRENKEDE. Pierced through.

Schalkez he schrede thurghe, and schrenkede mayles
Baneres he bare downe, bryttenede scheldes.
Morte Arthure, MS. Lincoln, f. 76.

SHREW. (1) A screw. Somerset.

(2) A scold. In earlier writers it often signified a wicked person of either sex, one malicious or badly disposed.

(3) To curse. (A.-S.)

(4) The field mouse. North.

SHREWD. Malicious; badly-disposed.

SHRICHE. To shriek. (A.-S.)

And the maid, al for-drede,
Bigan to schrichen an to grede.
Florice and Blancheflour, 454.

SHRICK. To shriek, a term formerly applied to the badger's noise at rutting time.

SHRIDE. To hew or lop wood. Jennings has shride, to cut off wood from the sides of trees, to cut off wood from trees generally. "Hooke to hewe wode, or schrydynge," Pr. Parv. p. 242.

SHRIFT. Confession. (A.-S.) Shrifte-fader, a father confessor.

SHRIGHT. Shrieked. (A.-S.)

It was the tyme when soyle
With foggie deaw was dight,
But lately falne; and shrowded foule
In shadie bushes shright.
Turbevile's Ovid, 1567, f. 60.

Thou schalt be mordrid in this stede!
This mayden tho for fere schrihte.
Gower, MS. Soc. Antiq. 134, f. 238.

SHRIKE. (1) The lesser butcher-bird, so called by Turner, according to Ray, ed. 1674, p. 83.

(2) To shriek. Palsgrave.

SHRIMMED. Chilled. Cornw.

SHRINE. A charnel-house. This sense of the word occurs in Hollyband's Dictionarie, 1593, as well as the ordinary meaning.

SHRIP. To rate, or chide. Kent.

SHRITE. The missel-thrush. South.

SHRIVE. (1) To confess. (A.-S.)

(2) To regard; to praise.

That grew both under a breere.
Robin Hood, i. 120.

SHROMP. A black worm, common in horse-dung. Var. dial.

SHROOD. To trim or lop trees. Glouc.

A fellow in North Wales, shrowding of a tree, fell down on his head, and his braine fractured, and lay for dead. Aubrey's Wiltshire, MS. Ashmole.

SHROUD. To gather together, as beasts do for warmth. Palsgrave.

SHROUDED. Concealed, covered, screened, sheltered, overgrown, shaded. "In the two latter senses I lately heard this speech, enforcing the argument for the thickly planting of apple trees —See how the cottagers trees are shrouded, and what crops they always bear," Moor's Suff. MS. Chaucer uses the verb shroude, to hide.

SHROUDES. Clothes. (A.-S.)

SHROVE. To be merry; probably derived from the sports and amusements of Shrovetide. "One that loveth to shrove ever and make good cheere," Florio, p. 59. Shrove-Prentices, a phrase which has never been correctly explained, was a name given to a set of ruffianly fellows, who took upon them at Shrovetide the name of London Prentices, and in that character invaded houses of ill-fame.

> More cruell then shrove-prentices, when they,
> Drunk in a brothell house, are bid to pay.
> Davenant's Madagascar, 1648, p. 28

SHROVE-CAKES. Small cakes made to give children on Shrovetide.

SHROVERS. Children who go from house to house at Shrovetide singing for cakes.

SHROVE-TUESDAY. Perhaps the following account of Shrove-Tuesday by Taylor, the Water Poet, is one of the most curious and illustrative that could be produced in explanation of the numerous allusions in early writers to the feasting and sports in vogue on that day. "Welcome merry Shrovetide," Shakespeare, 2 Henry IV. v. 3.

> Alwayes before Lent there comes wadling a fat grosse bursten-gutted groome, called Shrove-Tuesday, one whose manners shewes that he is better fed then taught: and indeed he is the onely monster for feeding amongst all the dayes of the yeere, for he devoures more flesh in foureteene houres, then this whole kingdome doth (or at the least should doe) in sixe weekes after: such boyling and broyling, such roasting and toasting, such stewing and brewing, such baking, frying, mincing, cutting, carving, devouring, and gorbellyed gurmondizing, that a man would thinke people did take in two months provision at once into their paunches, or that they did ballast their bellies with meate for a voyage to Constantinople or to the West Indies. Moreover, it is a goodly sight to see how the cookes in great men's kitchins doe fry in their masters suet, and sweat in their owne grease, that if ever a cooke be worth the eating it is when Shrove-Tuesday is in towne, for he is so stued and larded, roasted, basted, and almost over roasted, that a man may eate the rawest bit of him and never take a surfet. In a word, they are that day extreme cholericke, and too hot for any man to meddle with, being monarchs of the marow-bones, marquesses of the mutton, lords high regents of the spit and the kettle, barons of the gridiron, and sole commanders of the fryingpan. And all this hurly burly is for no other purpose but to stop the mouth of this land-wheale Shrove-Tuesday. At whose entrance in the morning all the whole kingdome is in quiet, but by that time the clocke strikes eleven, which (by the helpe of a knavish sexton) is commonly before nine, then there is a bell rung, cald The Pancake Bell, the sound whereof makes thousands of people distracted, and forgetfull either of manner or humanitie; Then there is a thing cald wheaten flowre which the sulphory necromanticke cookes doe mingle with water, egges, spice, and other tragicall magicall inchantments, and then they put it by little and little into a frying-pan of boyling suet, where it makes a confused dismall hissing (like the Learnean snakes in the reeds of Acheron, Stix or Phlegeton) untill at last by the skill of the cooke, it is transform'd into the forme of a flap-jack, which in our translation is cald a pancake, which ominous incantation the ignorant people doe devoure very greedily (having for the most part well dined before:) but they have no sooner swallowed that sweet candyed baite, but straight their wits forsake them, and they runne starke mad, assembling in routs and throngs numberlesse of ungoverned numbers, with uncivill civill commotions. Then Tim Tatters (a most valiant villaine) with an ensigne made of a piece of a bakers mawkin fixt upon a broome-staffe, he displaies his dreadfull colours, and calling the ragged regiment together, makes an illiterate oration, stuft with most plentifull want of discretion: the conclusion whereof is, that somewhat they will doe, but what they know not. Untill at last comes marching up another troope of tatterdemalians proclayming wars against no matter who, so they may be doing. Then these youths arm'd with cudgels, stones, hammers, rules, trowels, and hand-sawes, put playhouses to the sacke, and bawdy houses to the spoyle, in the quarrell breaking a thousand quarrels (of glasse I meane) making ambitious brickbats breake their neckes, tumbling from the tops of lofty chimnies, terribly untyling houses, ripping up the bowels of feather-beds, to the inriching of upholsters, the profit of plaisterers, and dirt-dawbers, the gaine of glasiers, joyners, carpenters, tylers, and bricklayers. And which is worse, to the contempt of justice: for what availes it for a constable with an army of reverend rusty bill-men to command peace to these beasts, for they with their pockets instead of pistols, well char'd with stone-shot, discharge against the image of authority whole volleyes as thicke as hayle, which robustious repulse puts the better sort to the worser part, making the band of unscowred halberdiers retyre faster then ever they came on, and shew exceeding discretion in proving tall men of their heeles. Thus by the unmanerly maners of Shrove-Tuesday constables are baffled, bawds are bang'd, punckes are pillag'd, panders are plagued, and the chiefe commanders of these valourous villiacoes, for their reward for all this confusion, doe in conclusion purchase the inheritance of a jayle, to the commodity of jaylors, and discommodity to themselves, with a fearefull expectation that Tiburne shall stoppe their throats, and the hangman take possession of their coates, or that some beadle in bloody characters shall imprint their faults on their shoulders. So much for Shrove-Tuesday, Jacke-a-Lents Gentleman Usher, these have beene his humours in former times, but I have some better hope of reformation in him hereafter, and indeed I wrote this before his comming this yeere 1617. not knowing how hee would behave himselfe; but tottering betwixt despaire and hope, I leave him.
> Taylor's Workes, 1630, i. 114-5

SHROVY. Shabby. Var. dial.

SHROWDS. Places under ground, as the burrows of animals, vaults, &c. "Into the walks and shrowds of wild beasts," Harrison, p. 205. "A shrowdes or lyke buildinge under the grounde," Elyot, in v. Apogæum, ed. 1559. The crypt of a church was sometimes so called. Shrowed, sheltered, Arch. xi. 224.

SIB. Relation; companion. (A.-S.) Still in use in Lincolnshire. He is sib to us, i. e., he is my cousin. "Sib'd, a-kin; no sole sib'd, nothing a-kin: no more sib'd then sieve and riddle, that grew both in a wood together. Prov. Chesh. Syb, or sybbe is an ancient Saxon word, signifying kindred, alliance, affinity," Ray's Words, ed. 1674, p. 40.

> I sett ȝow here a soveraynge, ascente ȝif ȝowe lykys, [illegible] hat ȝe wille for charyté cheese ȝow another.

Morte Arthure, MS. Lincoln, f. 60.

SIBBERIDGE. The banns of matrimony. It is often called sibrit, which would lead us to suppose it was connected with sibrede, q. v., and the latter was the more ancient and correct form. "Sybrede, banna," Pr. Parv. This word has been for a length of time peculiar to the Eastern counties, more especially Suffolk. Sir Thomas Browne refers it to Norfolk, and Ray to Suffolk. Major Moor derives it from the beginning of the banns as they used to be published in Latin, si quis sciveret. Ray's derivation from A.-S. sib appears to me to be much more probable.

SIBILACIONS. Hissings; growlings. (Lat.)

SIBILE-SAGE. The Queen of Sheba.

Sone after that verrayment
Tho Sibile Sage to Jerusalem went
To heren of Salamones wit.

SIBMAN. A relative. (A.-S.) It is the translation of affinis in Nominale MS. Sibnesse, relationship.

David thou were bore of my kyn,
For thi godnesse art thou myn,
More for thi godnesse
Then for eny sibnesse.
Harrowing of Hell, p. 27.

SIBREDE. Relationship; kindred. It is sometimes a substantive. (A.-S.)

Jhesu brother called was he,
For sibrede, worshepe and beauté.
Cursor Mundi, MS. Coll. Trin. Cantab. f. 79.
For every man it schulde drede,
And nameliche in his sibrede.
Gower, MS. Soc. Antiq. 134, f. 230.

Bot I forsake this gate, so me Gode helpe!
And sothely alle sybredyne bot thyselfe one.
Morte Arthure, MS. Lincoln, f. 96

SIC. A call to pigs. North.

SICATE. Dry. (Lat.)

Reade not in spight, but take delight
In this, whiche once was prose;
Whose watered plants scarse sicate were,
Till he this same did close.
Gaulfrido and Barnardo, 1570.

SIN-EATERS. It was an ancient custom at funerals to hire poor people, who were to take upon them the sins of the deceased.

> Within the memory of our fathers, in Shropshire, in those villages adjoyning to Wales, when a person dyed, there was notice given to an old sire, (for so they called him,) who presently repaired to the place where the deceased lay, and stood before the door of the house, when some of the family came out and furnished him with a cricket, on which he sat down facing the door. Then they gave him a groat, which he put in his pocket; a crust of bread, which he eat; and a full bowle of ale, which he drank off at a draught. After this he got up from the cricket and pronounced, with a composed gesture, the ease and rest of the soul departed, for which he would pawn his own soul. This I had from the ingenious John Aubrey, Esq., who made a collection of curious observations, which I have seen, and is now remaining in the hands of Mr. Churchill, the bookseller. How can a man think otherwise of this, than that it proceeded from the ancient heathens? Bagford, ap. Brand, ii. 152

SIX. A cup of six, i. e. a cup of beer sold at six shillings a barrel.

SIXES-AND-SEVENS. The true origin of this phrase has been given in v. Set (13).

SIX-LOVE. A term at whist, signifying six to none in scoring.

SIX-STRINGED-WHIP. A popular name for the statute of the six articles which passed in 1541. See Lingard, ed. 1844, vi. 293.

SIZE. (1) Six. Lanc.

(2) "A size," says Minsheu, "is a portion of bread or drinke, it is a farthing which schollers in Cambridge have at the buttery; it is noted with the letter S." See also Ellis's Literary Letters, p. 178. The word now means anything had by the students at dinner over and above the usual commons.

(3) Assizes. Still in use.

> Our drowning scap'd, more danger was ensuing,
> 'Twas size time there, and hanging was a brewing.
> Taylor's Workes, 1630, ii. 14

SIZY. Gluey; sticky. South.

SIZZEN. To hiss. North.

SIZZLE. The half hiss, half sigh of an animal; of an owl, for instance. Also the effervescence of brisk beer, &c. through a cork; or the alarming hissing of lightning very near one. Ray says that yeast is called sizzing from the sound of the working beer. Since this was written I heard the word thus used,—"If we heen't rain in another week we shall be all sizzled up." This evidently meant burnt up, as it was spoken in a season of fearful aridity. Moor's Suffolk Words, p. 351.

SIZZUP. A hard blow. North.

SIȜAND. Sighing. (A.-S.)

Fer in frithe as I can fare,
Myselfe syȝand allone,

And as he was betwixt them past,
They leapt upon him baith:
The one his pyke-staff gripped fast,
They feared for its skaith. Robin Hood, i.

SKALES. A game mentioned by Wager in his play called, "The longer thou Livest, the more Foole thou art." Some suppose it to be the same as Skoyles, q. v. See a mention in Clarke's Phraseologia, 1655, p. 254, and another in Florio's New World of Words, 1611, p. 19, from which latter it seems to have been a game like nine-pins, and the game of skittles is still so called in Devon.

SKALK. This word has not yet been explained. Other copies of the ballad preserved in MS. Harl. 372, f. 114, and Strype's Memorials of Cranmer, 1694, App. p. 138, agree in the reading here given.

Its meet for every man on this matter to talk,
And the glorious gospel ghostly to have in mind;
It is sothe said, that sect but much unseemly skalk,
As boyes babble in books, that in scripture are blind.
Percy's Reliques, p. 120.

SKIMMERING. Shining; an extreme degree of cleanliness. Durham.

SKIMMINGTON. "To ride," or "riding Skimmington," is, according to Grose, a ludicrous cavalcade in ridicule of a man beaten by his wife: it consists of a man riding behind a woman with his face to the horse's tail, holding a distaff in his hand, at which he seems to work, the woman all the while beating him with a ladle. A smock displayed on a staff is carried before them, as an emblematical standard, denoting female superiority: they are accompanied by what is called rough music, that is, frying-pans, bull's-horns, marrow-bones and cleavers, &c.—a procession admirably described by Butler in his "Hudibras." According to Jennings, the custom is still in vogue in Somerset.

SKIMPING. Scanty, said of dress when cut too short or narrow for the person. South.

SLADDERY. Wet and dirty. North.

SLADE. (1) A valley; a ravine; a plain. Brockett says its present meaning is "a breadth of green sward in ploughed land, or in plantations." I have heard the term in Northamptonshire applied to a flat piece of grass, and to a border of grass round a ploughed field. The first meaning (a valley) is given in the Herefordshire Gloss. p. 94; but Moor describes it "a small open hanging wood." See Morte d'Arthur, i. 161, 176, 192; British Bibl. i. 154; Gy of Warwike, p. 120.

> Sexty slongene in a slade of sleghe mene of armes.

SLICKENSIDES. A species of mineral substance found in some mines, the effects of which are terrific. A blow with a hammer, a stroke or scratch with a miner's pick, are sufficient to blast asunder the massive rocks to which it is found attached.

> The mines in Eyamedge are very deep, and the New-engine mine I have heard stated as being the deepest in Derbyshire. Among the number in the edge is the Hay-cliff, a mine distinguished for having contained in great abundance of that extraordinary phenomenon in the mineral world provincially called slickensides. It is a species of gelena, and is well known amongst mineralogists. This mine once had it in singular quantity and quality. One writer says, "The stroke is immediately succeeded by a crackling noise, accompanied with a noise not unlike the mingled hum of a swarm of bees; shortly afterwards an explosion follows, so loud and appalling that even the miners, though a hardy race of men, and little accustomed to fear, turn pale and tremble at the shock." Of the nature of this mineral, and its terrible power, there have been a many but quite unsatisfactory solutions. Whitehurst, in his work on the formation of the earth, thus mentions its wonderful power:—"In the year 1737, an explosion took place at the Hay-cliff mine, Eyam, by the power of slickensides. Two hundred barrels of materials were blown out at one blast, each barrel containing 350 lbs. weight. During the explosion the earth shook as by an earthquake." A person of the name of Higginbotham once but narrowly escaped with life, by striking incautiously this substance in the above mine. Experienced miners can, however, work where it greatly abounds without much danger. It is also known by the name of "cracking-whole."
> Wood's Desolation of Eyam.

(2) A nasty dirty fellow. East.

(3) Very spiteful. Somerset.

(4) A hospital. The term was originally applied to a lazar-house, or receptacle for persons affected with leprosy, but afterwards to a hospital of any kind. According to Gifford, a hospital or spital was an almshouse, and spittle a lazar-house; but this distinction seems to be an error. "A spittle, or hospitall for poore folkes diseased: a spittle, hospitall, or lazarhouse for lepres." Baret's Alvearie, 1580. Spittle whore, a very common whore.

> So shall you thrive by little and little,
> Scape Tyborne, counters, and the spittle.
> Songs of the London Prentices, p. 53.

SPITTLE-SERMONS. Sermons preached formerly at the Spittle, in a pulpit erected for the purpose, and afterwards at Christchurch, City, on Easter Monday and Tuesday. Ben Jonson alludes to them in his Underwoods, ap. Gifford, viii. 414.

SPITTLE-STAFF. A staff of wood four or five feet long, shod at the lower end with a wedge like a piece of iron, to stub thistles with. The use of this implement is much affected in small towns by the occupiers of two or three acres of pasture land. Linc.

SPIT-TURNER. A boy or dog employed to turn the spit for roasting.

SPLACK-NUCK. A miser. Norf.

SPLAIDE. Unfolded; displayed.

> He splayde his baners full grete plenté,
> And herawdys unto that cetè then sente he.
> Archæologia, xxi. 49.

SPLAIRGE. To splatter. Northumb.

SPLAITING. Splaiting in the shoulder of a horse is thus described by Topsell:

> This commeth by some dangerous sliding or slipping, wherby the shoulder parteth from the breast, and so leaves an open rift, not in the skin, but in the flesh and filme next under the skin, and so he halteth and is not able to goe; you shal perceive it by trailing his legge after him in his going. The cure according to Martin is thus: First put a paire of strait pasternes on his fore-feet, keeping him stil in the stable without disquieting him. Then take of dialthea one pound, of sallet-oyle one pinte, of oyle de bayes halfe a pound, of fresh butter halfe a pound; melt al these things together in a pipkin, and annoint the grieved place therwith, and also round about the inside of the shoulder, and within two or three daies after, both that place and all the shoulder besides wil swel. Then either prick him with a lancet or fleame in al the swelling places, or else with some other sharp hot iron, the head whereof would be an inch long, to the intent that the corruption may run out, and use to annoint it stil with the same ointment. But if you see that it wil not go away, but swel stil, and gather to a head, then lance it where the swelling doth gather most, and is soft under the finger, and then taint it with flax dipt in this ointment; take of turpentine and of hogs grease of each two ounces, and melt them together, renewing the taint twice a day until it be whole.
> History of Four-Footed Beasts, 1607, p. 398.

> His whynges splayynge to and ffro.
> MS. Cott. Tiber. A. vii. f. 42.

SPLAYED-BITCH. A castrated bitch. It is a superstition still existing in retired parts of the county, that certain persons had the power of transforming themselves into the shape of different animals, particularly hares, and that nothing could have any chance of running against them but a splayed bitch. Linc.

SPLAYING. Slanting. Oxon.

SPLEEN. Violent haste. Shak.

SPLEENY. Full of spleen, or anger.

SPLEET. "Piscem exdorsuare, to spleete out, or part alongest the ridge-bone just in the midst," Nomenclator, 1585, p. 62.

SPLENDIDIOUS. Splendid. Drayton.

SPLENT. (1) A lath. "Splent for an house, laite," Palsgrave. The term is still in use in Suffolk. Splents are parts of sticks or poles, either whole or split, placed upright in forming walls, and supported by rizzers (qv) for receiving the clay daubing. The term seems to have been applied to any small thin piece of wood.

> Or wilt thou in a yellow boxen bole,
> Taste with a wooden splent the sweet lythe honey?
> The Affectionate Shepheard, 1594.

(2) In the following passage splent seems to mean a splinter, or chip, or perhaps one of the splents, q. v.

> On the schoulder felle the stroke,

> Beves of Hamtoun, p. 69.

SQUAIGE. To whip, or beat. East.

SQUAIL. To throw sticks at cocks. Squailer, the stick thrown. West. Mr. Akerman says sqwoiling is used for throwing, but something more is required than merely throwing; the thing thrown must be some material not easily managed. Jennings properly says, to fling with a stick; and he might have added, with a stick sometimes made unequally heavy by being loaded with lead at one end. Squailing therefore is often very awkwardly performed, because the thing thrown cannot be well directed; hence the word squailing is often used in ridicule, not only of what is done awkwardly, but what is untowardly or irregularly shaped. "She went up the street squailing her arms about, you never saw the like:" an ill shaped loaf is a squailing loaf; Brentford is a long squailing town; and, in Wiltshire, Smithfield Market would be called a squailing sort of a place.

SQUAILS. Ninepins. Somerset.

SQUAIMOUS. Squeamish. Perhaps as esquaymous, which I fear is explained wrongly.

SQUIRREL. A prostitute.

SQUIRREL-HUNTING. A curious Derbyshire custom. The wakes at Duffield are held on the first Sunday after the first of November, and on the wakes Monday the young men and boys of the village collect together, to the number of two or three hundred, and with pots and kettles, frying-pans, cows' horns, and all the discordant instruments they can procure, proceed to Kedleston, about three miles distant, in search of a squirrel. They gather themselves round the fine oaks and elms in the park, and with the noise of their instruments and their loud halloos soon succeed in starting one amongst the boughs. This they chase from tree to tree, until stunned with the noise, and wearied with exertion, it falls to the ground, and is captured; it is carried back in triumph to Duffield, and not unfrequently undergoes the torment of a second hunt in a wood near the village. Whether this is the remains of a privilege of hunting in the forest of Duffield, possessed by the inhabitants or not, I know not, but many unsuccessful attempts have been made to stop it, the inhabitants always asserting their right to hunt. At the same village the old custom of wren hunting is still observed. See Hunting-the-Wren.

STALKER. (1) A fowler. Properly, one who used the stalking-horse. North.

(2) A kind of fishing net.

STALKING. Wet and miry. Glouc.

STALKING-COAT. A sort of coat worn in England in the reign of Henry VIII.

STALKING-HORSE. A horse real or fictitious, by which a fowler screens himself from the sight of the game.

What a slie buzzard it is! A man can scarce get a shoot at him with a stalking-horse. He has been scar'd sure.

Clarke's Phraseologia Puerilis, 1655, p. 126.

There is no getting at some fowl without a stalking-horse, which must be some old jade trained up for that purpose, who will gently, as you would have him, walk up and down in the water which way you please, flodding and eating the grass that grows therein; behind whose fore-shoulder you are to shelter yourself and gun, bending your body down low by his side, and keeping his body still full between you and the fowl. When you are within shot take your level from before the fore-part of the horse, giving fire as it were between his neck and the water, which is much better shooting than under his belly. Now to supply the defect of a real stalking-horse, which will take up a great deal of time to instruct and make fit for this exercise, an artificial one may be made of any piece of old canvas, which is to be shap'd in form of a horse, with the head bending downwards, as if he graz'd. It may be stuffed with any light matter, and should be painted of the colour of a horse, whereof brown is the best; in the middle let it be fixt to a staff, with a sharp iron at the end, to stick into the ground as occasion requires, standing fast while you take your level; and farther, as it must be very portable, it should also be moved, so as it may seem to graze as it goes; neither ought its stature be too high or too low, for the one will not hide the body, and the other will be apt to fright the fowl away. But when you have so beat the fowl with the stalking-horse that they begin to find your deceit, and will no longer endure it, you may stalk with an ox or cow made of painted canvas, till the stalking-horse be forgot, while others again stalk with stags, or red deer, formed out of painted canvas, with the natural horns of stags fixed thereon, and the colour so lively painted that the fowl cannot discern the fallacy.

Dictionarium Rusticum, 1726

"This word is still used in some colleges in the University of Cambridge: to stang scholars in Christmas being to cause them to ride on a coltstaff or pole for missing of chappel," Ray, ed. 1674, p. 44.

> And ȝet hem halchez al hole the halvez to-geder,
> And sythen on a stif stange stoutly hem henges.
> Syr Gawayn and the Grene Knyȝt, 1614

(7) Riding the stang. This is a custom well known throughout the North, and intended for the benefit of those husbands who beat their wives. Formerly the offending party was forcibly mounted across a stang or pole on which he was conveyed with a rabble at his heels through the town or village, and compelled to listen to the proclamation of his unmanly conduct, accompanied with the noise of tin cans, horns, &c. But now some one of the assembled multitude, consisting chiefly of boys, is elevated on a pole or ladder, and gives utterance to the following doggrel verses:

> Ran, Dan, Dan, the sign of our old Tin Can,
> Taylor Wood has been beating his good woman;

He beat her with neither stick, stone, nor stower,
But up'd with his goose and knock'd her ower.
If ever he does the like again,
As we suppose he will,
We'll mount him on a nanny goat.
And ride him down to hell.

So runs a version obtained some years ago at Louth by Mr. Adcock, and probably continues to this day. In the neighbourhood of Lincoln there is a considerable variation. The cry or proclamation is as follows:

Ran, Tan, Tan, the sign of the old Tin Can;
Stephen Smith's been paying his daughter Nan:
He paid her both behind and before,
He paid her 'cause she wouldn't be his whore.
He lick'd her neither with stake nor stower,
But up wi' his fist and knock'd her ower.
Now if Steenie Smith don't mend his manners
The skin of his . . . shall go the tanner's:
And if the tanner don't tan it well;
Skin, tanner, and . . . shall go to hell.

STIFFLE. A complaint in horses.

> The horse is said to be stifled when the stiffling bone is removed from the place; but if it be not removed nor loosened, and yet the horse halteth by meanes of some griefe there, then we say that the horse is hurt in the stiffle, and not stiffled. The stiffle commeth by meanes of some blow, or some great straine, slipping or sliding. The signes be these. If he be stiffled, the one bone wil sticke out farther than the other, and is apparant to the eie. Martin woulde have you to cure the stiffle in al points like unto the shoulder-pight, saving that the pins need not bee so long, because the stifling place is not so broad as the shoulder, and standing in the stable; let him have a pasterne with a ring on his forelegge, and thereunto fasten a cord, which cord must go about his necke, and let it be so much strained as it may bring his sore legge more forward than the other to keepe the bone from starting out. But if the horse bee but hurt in the stiffle with some stripe or straine, then the bone wil not stand out, but perhaps the place may be swollen. The cure according to Martin is thus. First annoint the place with the ointment mentioned before, every day once the space of a fortnight, and if the horse amend not with this, then rowel him with a hearen rowel, or else with a quil, and let the neather hole be somwhat before the sore place, and clense the hole every daye by turning the rowel, continuing stil to anoint the place with the ointment aforesaid, and that wil make him whole.

STOBBALL-PLAY. Aubrey, in his Nat. Hist. Wilts, Royal Soc. MS. p. 347, gives the following account of this game:—"It is peculiar to North Wilts, North Glocestershire, and a little part of Somerset, near Bath; they strike a ball stuffed very hard with quills, and covered with soale-leather as big as a . . . . . bullet, with a staffe commonly made of withy about three and a halfe feet long. Colemdowne is the place so famous and so frequented for stobball playing. The twife is very fine, and the rock freestone is within an inch and half of the surface, which gives the ball so quick a rebound. A stobball-ball is of about four inches diameter, stuffed very hard with quills, sowed into soale leather, and as hard as a stone. I doe not heare that this game is used anywhere in England but in this part of Wiltshire, and Gloucestershire adjoyning. They strike the ball with a great turned staff of about four feet long." So far Aubrey, which I have corrected by reference to the rough draft of this work in the Ashmolean Museum. See also Stowe's Survey of London, ed. 1720, b. i. p. 257. STOCKS. (1) A wooden prison for the legs, used in villages as a punishment for petty offences. They may still be seen in many places, though generally disused. They are introduced upon the stage in the old play of Hick Scorner, and in King Lear. The Worcester Journal of Jan. 19th, 1843, informs us that this old mode of punishment was recently revived at Stratford-on-Avon for drunkenness, and a passer-by asking a fellow who was doing penance how he liked it, the reply was—"I beant the first mon as ever were in the stocks, so I don't care a fardin about it." Holme describes the stocks, "a prison or place of security to keep safe all such as the constable finds to be night-walkers, common drunkards and swearers, that have no money, and such like; also petty thieves, strippers of hedges, robbers of hen-roosts, and light-fingered persons, who can let none of their masters or mistresses goods or cloaths lye before them; also wandring rogues, gipsies, and such as love begging better than labour."

STOOL-BALL. An ancient game at ball, played by both sexes. According to Dr. Johnson, it is a play where balls are driven from stool to stool. See a further notice in Strutt, p. 97. In Lewis's English Presbyterian Eloquence, p. 17, speaking of the tenets of the Puritans, he observes that "all games where there is any hazard of loss are strictly forbidden; not so much as a game at stool-ball for a Tansay, or a cross and pyle for the odd penny at a reckoning, upon pain of damnation." This quotation is given by Brand, in his Pop. Antiq. The following is from Herrick's Hesperides, 1648, p. 280:

At stool-ball, Lucia, let us play
For sugar-cakes and wine;
Or for a tansie let us pay,
The losse be thine or mine.
If thou, my deere, a winner be
At trundling of the ball,
The wager thou shalt have, and me,
And my misfortunes all.

Poor Robin, in his Almanack for 1677, in his Observations on April, opposite the 16th and 17th, Easter Monday and Tuesday, says,—

> Young men and maids,
> Now very brisk,
> At barley-break and > Stool-ball frisk.

Let country swaines and silly swads be still;
To court, yoong wag, and wanton there thy fill.
Greene's Perimedes, 1588

How should the reasonable soule (unlesse all his prime faculties were drowned and drenched in the lees of sense) affect such a swad?
The Two Lancashire Lovers, 1640, p. 22.

O, how this tickles mee, to see a swad,
Who ne'r so much as education had
To make him generous, advanc'd to state.
Brathwaite's Honest Ghost, 1658, p. 3.

I have opinion, and have ever had,
That when I see a stagg'ring drunken swad,
Then that a man worse then an asse I see
Taylor's Motto, 1622.

(2) The pod of a pea, &c. North. Grose says the term is used metaphorically for one that is slender, p. 157, ed. 1839. Coles has a different application. "A swad [of a woman], obesula." A handful of pease-straw is also called a swad.

3) A sword. Suffolk.

(4) A fish-basket. Sussex.

SWADDER. A pedlar. Earle, p. 249. "Swadders or pedlers." Harrison's England, p. 184.

And sche for angir therof swalle.
Gower, MS. Soc. Antiq. 134, f. 40

SWALLOCKY. A term applied to the appearance of clouds in hot weather before a thunderstorm. East.

SWALLOP. A heavy lounging walk. Norf.

SWALLOW. (1) A hollow in the earth. North. Carr has swallow, a deep hollow in the ground, in which the rain is swallowed or conveyed off. It is an archaism, occurring under the form swolowe, a gulf or abyss, as in the Legende of Dido, 179, "the swolowe of hell." Maundevile, p. 33, mentions "a sweloghe of the gravely see." According to Kennett, "where hollow caverns remain in the earth upon mine works, if the roof or top of such caverns or hole made by such fall is calld a swallow and a swallow pit." In the Pr. Parv. occurs, "Swelwhe of a water or of a grownde, vorago," MS. Harl. 221, f. 167.

Howevere the sayde nowse lye or be edified with his gardeyns, wallis, gutters, swolous, lying or beyng upon any partye of the grownde.

(4) A strong strapping fellow North.

SWANT. Proper; steady. West.

SWAN-UPPING. The taking of swans, performed annually by the swan companies, with the Lord Mayor of London at their head, for the purpose of marking them. The king's swans were marked with two nicks or notches, whence a double animal was invented, unknown to the Greeks, called the swan with two necks. A MS. of swan marks is in the library of the Royal Society, described in Arch. xvi. Upping the swans was formerly a favorite amusement, and the modern term swan-hopping is merely a corruption from it. The struggle of the swans when caught by their pursuers, and the duckings which the latter received in the contest, made this diversion very popular. See Kempe's Loseley Manuscripts, p. 309.

SWAP. (1) To barter; to exchange. Var. dial.

(2) To cut wheat in a peculiar way, to chop, not to reap it. Sussex.

(3) Clean; quickly; smartly. West.

> Watir to sle swarth lice. Take mogwort, wormewode, saveyn, the water of theis sleth the vermyn in mans eynlyddes, and in his chare benethe the navelle. MS. Sloane 7, f. 51.

(2) Sward; grass; any outward covering, as the rind of bacon. (A.-S.) " On the swarthe lengede," Morte Arthure, MS. f. 84.

(3) Grose defines swarth, " grass just cut to be made up into hay." A swarth is a row of cut grass. An anonymous correspondent has furnished me with the following observations on a passage hitherto unintelligible:

" In Mr. Wright's first volume of the Biographia Britannica Literaria (Anglo-Saxon period), there is a riddle, the seventh line of which is thus printed:

corfen sworfen: cut and —— leaving the second word untranslated. It strikes me that sworfen is the same word which is now used in Kent and elsewhere as swarthed, or laid in swarth. It is the word required in that particular part of the description to carry out the process regularly, cut and swarthed, turned and dried, bound and twisted, &c."

SWART-RUTTER. " A reister or swart-rutter, a German horseman," Cotgrave.

> Good thriftie men, they drawe out a dinner with sallets, like a swart-rutter's sute, and make Madona Nature their best caterer

SWARVE. (1) To climb.

> Then Gordon swarved the maine-mast tree,
> He swarved it with might and maine;
> But Horseley with a bearing arrowe,
> Stroke the Gordon through the braine.
> Percy's Reliques, p. 136.

(2) To swerve. Morte d'Arthur, ii. 225.

> And doth hartily confesse that whosoever swarves from this patterne swarves from honesty, though hee be deepely learned.
> Stephens' Essayes and Characters, 1615, p. 198.

SWITHIN (ST.) The notion current, I believe, pretty extensively, that if we have rain on this day, not one of the next forty will be wholly without, is still in full force among us. Nares notices it as an old and often revived superstition; referring to ample illustrations thereof in Pop. Ant., where it is not, however, mentioned that Ben Jonson, in his Every Man out of his Humour, introduces it. In Alban Butler's Lives of the Saints, Swithin is recorded; but nothing is said of the rainy prodigy. Moor.

SWITHINGE.

And als warme als it may be suffrede lay it on the malady, and suffre it to lygge unto the ȝokynge and swythynge be alle passede awaye.

(3) On my sword, formerly a common oath. Sword and buckler, martial.

(4) "Sworde for a flaxe wyfe, guinche," Palsg.

SWORD-DANCING. There is a very singular custom, called sword-dancing, prevalent in many parts of Northumberland, and in the county of Durham, during the Christmas holidays, which seems to be peculiar to the northern part of the kingdom. The sword-dancers are men entirely or chiefly composed of miners or pitmen, and of persons engaged in the various other vocations of a colliery, who, during the week intervening between Christmas and New Year's Day, perambulate the country in parties, consisting of from twelve to twenty, partly in search of money, but much more of adventure and excitement. On these occasions they are habited in a peculiarly gaudy dress, which, with their dancing, principally attracts attention. Instead of their ordinary jackets they wear others, composed of a kind of variegated patchwork, which, with their hats, are profusely decorated with ribands of the gayest hues, prepared and wrought by their sisters or sweethearts, the sword-dancers being usually young and unmarried men. This, with slight individual variations, is the description of dress worn by all the members of a sword-dancing party, with the exception of two conspicuous characters invariably attached to the company, and denominated amongst themselves respectively the Tommy (or fool) and the Bessy. Those two personages wear the most frightfully grotesque dresses imaginable; the former being usually clad in the skin of some wild animal, and the latter in petticoats and the costume of an old woman; and it is the office of those two individuals, who play by far the most important part in sword-dancing excursions, to go round amongst the company which collects to see them dance, and levy contributions in money, each being furnished for this purpose with a huge tin or iron box, which they rattle in the faces of the bystanders, and perform other antics and grimaces to procure subscriptions. A fiddler also is an indispensable attaché to a company of sword-dancers; and it is the business of another of the party to carry about a change of wearing apparel for his comrades, which becomes necessary when they make protracted journeys, as they sometimes do, into the country, going round amongst the towns and hamlets, and farm-steadings, and exhibiting their dance before the inhabitants. This is a peculiar kind of dance, which it would be vain to attempt to describe. It bears some resemblance to an ordinary quadrille dance, with this difference, that the sword-dancers are each furnished with long steel wands, which they call swords, and which they employ with a very peculiar and beautiful effect during the dance. The dance is sometimes accompanied with a song, and a fragment of dramatic action. The fiddler accompanies the song in unison with the voice, repeating at the end of each stanza the latter part of the air, forming an interlude between the verses; during which the characters are introduced by the singer, make their bow and join the circle.

1. The first that I call in he is a squire's son;
He's like to lose his love because he is too young.
2. Altho' he be too young, he has money for to rove
And he'll freely spénd it all before he'll lose his love.
3. The next that I call in, he is a sailor bold,
He came to poverty by the lending of his gold.
4. The next that I call in, he is a tailor fine,
What think you of his work? he made this coat of mine.
5. The next that I call in, he is a keelman grand,
He goes both fore and aft, with his long sett in his hand.
6. Alas! our actor's dead, and on the ground he's laid,
Some of us must suffer for't, young man, I'm sore afraid.
7. I'm sure 'twas none of me, I'm clear of the crime,
'Twas him that follows me, that drew his sword so fine.
8. I'm sure 'twas none of me, I'm clear of the fact,
'Twas him that follows me that did the bloody act.
9. Then cheer up, my bonny lads, and be of courage bold.
We'll take him to the church, and bury him in the mould.
10. Cox-Green's a pretty place, where water washes clean,
And Painshaw's on a hill, where we have merry been.
11. You've seen them all call'd in, you've seen them all go round,
Wait but a little while, some pastime shall be found.
12. Then, fiddler, change the tune, play us a merry jig,
Before I will be beat, I'll pawn both hat 'and wig.

In explanation of the above, it should be stated, that after the fifth verse other characters are generally introduced in a similar manner, and then the sword-dance takes place, in which one of them is killed. After the ninth verse the doctor is introduced, and a dialogue of some length takes place, which terminates in his restoring the dead man to life.

A writer in the Gent. Mag. for May, 1811, tells us that in the North Riding of Yorkshire the sword-dance is performed from St. Stephen's Day till New Year's Day. The dancers usually consist of six youths, dressed in white, with ribands, attended by a fiddler, a youth with the name of Bessy, and also by one who personates a doctor. They travel from village to village. One of the six youths acts the part of King in a kind of farce, which consists chiefly of singing and dancing, when the Bessy interferes while they are making a hexagon with their swords, and is killed. Brand's Popular Antiquities, i. 283.

SWORDER. A game cock that wounds its antagonist much.

SWORD-PLAYER. A juggler with swords. "Gladiator, a swerdplaer," Nominale MS.

SWORD-SLIPER. See Slip (3). The term appears to be now applied to a sword-cutler. "Sword-sleiper, a dresser or maker of swords; so used in the North of England; and a cutler with them deals onely in knives," Blount p. 628, ed. 1681.

MS. Cantab. Ff. ii. 38, f. 186.

Still in a swound, my heart revives and faints,
'Twixt hopes, despaires, 'twixt smiles and deep complaints,
As these sad accents sort in my desires,
Smooth calmes, rough stormes, sharp frosts, and raging fires,
Put on with boldnesse, and put backe with feares,
For oft thy troubles doe extort my teares.
Drayton's Heroicall Epistles, 1637, p. 174.

SWOWE. (1) To faint; to swoon. (A.-S.) Also, a swoon. See Swoughe (1).

(2) A noise.

He come to hym wyth a swowe,
Hys gode stede undur hym he slowe.
MS. Cantab. Ff. ii. 38, f. 65.

(2) The tag, or end of a lace. East.

(3) Children's hanging sleeves. East.

TABARD. A short coat, or mantle. "Colobium, a tabard," Nominale MS. Strutt describes it, ii. 29, "a species of mantle which covered the front of the body and the back, but was open at the sides from the shoulders downwards; in the early representations of the tabard, it appears to have been of equal length before and behind, and reached a little lower than the loins." According to Nares, the name of tabarder is still preserved in Queen's College, Oxford, for scholars whose original dress was a tabard. "Tabard, a garment, manteau," Palsgrave. Verstegan says in his time, the term was confined to a herald's coat.

> Quat wylt thu ʒeve, so Cryst the save!
> And tak the qwych thu wylt have.
> The man seyde, so mote I the!
> A peny xal I ʒevyn the.

TABERN. A cellar. North. See Ray's English Words, 1674, p. 48. "Taberna, a tabyrn," a tavern or inn, Nominale MS. Hence taberner, a tavern-keeper. "Tabernarius, a taberner," Nominale MS. A person who played the tabour was also called a taberner.

TABERNACLES. Ornamental niches.

> With tabernacles was the halle a-bouʒte,
> With pynnacles of golde sterne and stoute.
> Syre Gawene and the Carle of Carelyle, 610.

TABINE. A kind of silk. In a list of female apparel in the Egerton Papers, p. 252, mention is made of "tabines brauncht or wrought with sylver or gold."

TABLE. (1) To go to the table, i. e. to receive the Holy Communion. Var. dial.

(2) In palmistry, a space between certain lines on the skin within the hand. According to our first extract, the table is a line reaching from the bottom of the little finger to the bottom of the first finger. It is incorrectly explained the "palm of the hand" in Middleton, iv. 438; but the term was certainly variously applied.

> Hit ys to know that the lyne that goth about the thombe ys cleped the lyne of lyfe or of the hert. The lyne that ys betwene the medylle of the pawme that ys betwene the thombe and the next fynger, is cleped media naturalis. The lyne that begynnyth under the litille fynger and streccheth toward the rote of the fynger next the thombe ys cleped mensalis, that is, the table ; it ys sothely the lyne which is cleped the nether triangle, which is sylden founde, and it begynneth fro mensali, strecchyng ryʒt throw the pawme tille to the wrist. Lina recepta ys he that is withyn the ende of the honde, appon the joynt of the hond that is betwene the boone of the arme or of the hond. Mons pollicis is fro the lyne of the hert tille to the rote of the wombe, and strecchethe itselfe to the wryste. Mons manus or the tabulle begynnyth fro mensali to the wryste. Treatise on Palmistry, MS. xv. Cent.

> Other lines also may be divided into equal sections, as the table line, the natural line, the quadrangle and triangle, which are all to be parted into equal portions, and according to proportion shall shew the time and age of life in which every accident shall happen, which the characters shall signifie, in their several natures. This space is called the table of the hand, which hath on the one side the mensal line, on the other the middle natural line. Sanders' Chiromancy, p. 87.

(3) A tablet, or table-book; a record of things to be remembered. Shak.

(4) To board; to live at the table of another. See Autobiography of Joseph Lister, p. 48.

> All supper while, if they table together, he peereth and prieth into the platters to picke out dainty morsels to content her maw.
> The Man in the Moone, 1609.

TABLE-BOOK. A memorandum-book; a book with leaves of wood, slate, vellum, or asses skin, &c., for the purpose of recording observations and memoranda. It was sometimes accompanied with a calendar, &c.; and was used on all occasions, at theatres, sermons, &c. "A reproofe or a jeer out of your table-book notes," Nabbes' Bride, 1640, sig. G. ii. A table-book of wood is in the possession of Mr. J. H. Hearn, of Newport, Isle of Wight, and is described in the Journal of the British Archæological Association, ii. 193, but very few seem to have been preserved.

> His table-bookes be a chiefe adjunct, and the most significant embleme of his owne quallity that man may beare about him: for the wiping out of olde notes give way to new, and he likewise, to try a new disposition, will finally forsake an ancient friends love, because hee consists of new enterprises.

Stephens' Essayes, 1615, p. 218.

When the table-line is crooked, and falls between the middle and fore finger, it signifies effusion of blood, as I said before.
Sanders' Chiromancy, p. 75.

TABLE-MAN. "A tabylle mane, status, timpanum," MS. Dict. c. 1500.

TABLE-MEN. Men used at the game of tables. Metaphorically, dice-players.

And knowing that your most selected gallants are the onelye table-men that are plaid withal at ordinaries, into an ordinary did he most gentleman-like convay himselfe in state.
Dekker's Lanthorne and Candle-Light, 1620, sig. D. iv.

TABLER. One who keeps boarders, one who tables people. See Table (4). Also, the person who tables, a boarder. "Commensále, a fellow border or tabler," Florio, p. 111. "Convictor, a tabler, boarder," Coles.

To pley at the ches or at the tablere.
MS. Harl. 1701, f. 7.

TABLES. The game of backgammon. It was anciently played in different ways, and the term appears to have been applied to any game played with the table and dice. Strutt has given a fac-simile of a backgammon-board from a MS. of the 14th century, which differs little from the form now used. See Sports and Pastimes, p. 321. "Alea, table," MS. Lansd. 560, f. 45.

Go we now to chaumbur same,
On some maner to make us game;
To the chesses or to the tabels,
Or ellys to speke of fabels.
MS. Cantab. Ff. ii. 38, f. 166.

It is a tacche of a devouryng hounde
To resseyve superfluyté and do excesse.
MS. Cantab. Ff. i. 6, f. 157

(3) A clasp. Also, to clasp; to tie. "I tache a gowne or a typpet with a tache, je agraffe," Palsgrave. "Spinter, a tache," MS. Arundel 249, f. 88.

Wylt thou have a buckle of golde or a golden pynne, suche as in olde tyme women used to fasten their upper garment with on the left shoulder; Stephanus calleth it a tache or a claspe.
Palsgrave's Acolastus, 1540.

(4) To take a thief.
(5) The piece which covered the pocket, and therefore the belly. Meyrick, ii. 251.
(6) A rest used in drilling holes. Yorksh.

TACHEMENTEZ. Attachments?

I ȝif the for thy thyȝandez Tolouse the riche,
The tolle and the tachementez, tavernez and other.
Morte Arthure, MS. Lincoln, f. 70.

TACHING-END. The waxed thread, armed with a bristle at the end, used by shoemakers. North.

TACK. (1) A smack, or peculiar flavour. Drayton uses the term, and it is still in common use.

He told me that three-score pound of cherries was but a kind of washing meate, and that there was no tacke in them, for hee had tride it at one time.
Taylor's Workes, 1630, i. 145.

TAIL-BINDER. A long large piece of cut stone projecting over the corner stone of a wall to give additional firmness to it.

TAIL-CORN. The inferior portion of a dressing, not fit for market. About one in twenty, or more, according to the season, will be tail-corn. This, though not very much inferior, would, if left in the boke, injure the sale at market. By the farmer who prides himself on the goodness of his sample, this is dressed out and spent at home. Dross is different. This is undercorn, so light and inferior as to be given to poultry.

TAILDE. Carved.

> The wardes of the cyté of hefen bryght
> I lycken tyl wardes that stalworthly dyght,
> And clenely wroght and craftyly taylde

(7) To contain. Ben Jonson, viii. 301.

(8) To leap. Shak.

(9) To blast, as if by witchcraft. Shakespeare uses the term, and it is still current in the West of England. "Taken, as chyldernes lymmes be by the fayries, faée," Palsgrave. In an old MS. collection of receipts in my possession is one "for to make a man hole that kechith cold in his slepe that he ys ny take;" and another "for a man that ys take in his slepe."

A horsse which is bereft of his feeling, mooving or stirring, is said to be taken, and in sooth so he is, in that he is arrested by so villainous a disease, yet some farriors, not wel understanding the ground of the disease, conster the word taken to bee striken by some plannet or evill spirit, which is false, for it proceedeth of too great aboundance of fleme and choler, simboliz'd together. The cure is thus. Let him blood in his spur-vains, and his breast vaines, and then by foulding him in aboundant number of cloaths, drive him into an extreame sweat, during which time of his sweating, let one chafe his legs with oyle de bay, then after he hath sweat the space of two houres, abate his cloaths moderatly, and throughly after he is dry, annoint him all over with oyle petrolium, and in twice or thrice dressing him he wil be sound.
Markham, ap. Topsell's Beasts, 1607, p. 351.

THROWING-THE-STOCKING. A curious custom, thus described in a poem dated 1733:

Then come all the younger folk in,
With ceremony throw the stocking;
Backward, o'er head, in turn they toss'd it,
Till in sack-posset they had lost it.
Th' intent of flinging thus the hose
Is to hit him or her o' th' nose;
Who hits the mark, thus, o'er left shoulder,
Must married be ere twelve months older.
Deucalion thus, and Pyrrha, threw
Behind them stones, whence mankind grew.
Brand's Pop. Antiq. ii. 108.

The first use the two lads of the castle made of their existence was to ply the bridegroom so hard with bumpers, that in less than an hour he made divers efforts to sing, and soon after was carried to bed, deprived of all manner of sensation, to the utter disappointment of the bridemen and maids, who, by this accident, were prevented from throwing the stocking, and performing certain other ceremonies practised on such occasions.
Peregrine Pickle, chap. 4.

But as luck would have it ye parson said grace,
And to frisking and dancing they shuffled apace,
Each lad took his lass by the fist;
And when he had squeez'd her, and gaum'd her untill
The fat of her face ran down like a mill,
He toll'd for the rest of the grist.
In sweat and in dust having wasted the day,
They enter'd upon the last act of the play,
The bride to her bed was convey'd;
Where knee deep each hand fell downe to the ground,
And in seeking the garter much pleasure was found,
'Twould have made a man's arm have stray'd.
This clutter ore, Clarinda lay
Half bedded, like the peeping day
Behind Olimpus cap;
Whiles at her head each twittring girle
The fatal stocking quick did whirle
To know the lucky hap.
The bridegroom in at last did rustle,
All dissap-pointed in the bustle,
The maidens had shav'd his breeches;
But let him not complain, tis well,
In such a storm, I can you tell,
He save'd his other stitches.
Account of a Wedding, Fletcher's Poems, p. 230.

TOMS-OF-BEDLAM. These vagabonds have already been noticed under Abraham-men, q. v., their other appellation. Aubrey, in his Nat. Hist. Wilts, Royal Soc. MS., p. 259, relates the following anecdote concerning Sir Thomas More:—"Where this gate now stands [at Chelsea] was, in Sir Thomas More's time, a gate-house, according to the old fashion. From the top of this gate-house was a most pleasant and delightfull prospect, as is to be seen. His lordship was wont to recreate himself in this place, to apricate and contemplate, and his little dog with him. It so happened that a Tom ô Bedlam gott up the staires when his lordship was there, and came to him, and cryed, "leap, Tom, leap," offering his lo. violence to have thrown him over the battlements. His lo. was a little old man, and in his gown, and not able to make resistance, but having presentnesse of witt, seyd, "Let's first throw this little dog over." The Tom ô Bedlam threw the dog down. "Pretty sport," sayd the Lord Chancelour, "goe down, and bring it up, and try again." Whilest the mad-man went down for the dog, his lordship made fast the dore of the staires, and called for help, otherwise he had lost his life by this unexpected danger." To this Aubrey appends the following note: "Till the breaking out of the civill warres Tom ô Bedlams did travell about the countrey; they had been poore distracted men that had been putt into Bedlam, where recovering to some sobernesse, they were licentiated to goe a begging, e. g. they had on their left arm an armilla of tinn printed in some workes, about four inches long; they could not gett it off. They wore about their necks a great horn of an oxe in a string or bawdrie, which when they came to an house for almes, they did wind; and they did putt the drink given them into this horn, whereto they did putt a stopple. Since the warres I doe not remember to have seen any one of them." In a later hand is added, "I have seen them in Worcestershire within these thirty years, 1756."

YARRINGLES. "An instrument of great use among good housewifes, by means of which yarn-slippings or hanks (after they have been washed and whitened) are wound up into clews or round balls; these by some are termed a pair of yarringles, or yarringle blades, which are nothing else but two sticks or pieces of wood set cross, with a hole in the middle, to turn round about a wooden or iron pin fixed in the stock; the ends are full of holes, to put the pins in, narrower or wider, according to the compass of the slipping or yarn upon it. Some have these instruments jointed with hinges, to turn treble, they being the easier for carriage; but such are more for curiosity than necessity. The stock is made of various shapes; some have a square on the top, with a wharl in the middle, and edged about like the sides of a box, into which the clews are put, as they are wound, and this is set upon three or four wooden feet. Others have them in form of a pillar fixed in a square, with a three-cornered or round foot, either plain or else wrought with turned or carved work, to show the ingenuity of the artificer, or splendour of the owner," Dict. Ȝ. This character is found in early English MSS. written after the twelfth century. It is a corruption of the Anglo-Saxon letter g, and sometimes answers to our g, sometimes to y, sometimes to gh, and also to a mute consonant at the commencement of a word. In the middle of a word it occasionally stands for i; in the same manner the A.-S. g has been changed into i, when in a similar position. It should be remarked that the letter z often appears in MSS. under this character, with which, however, it has clearly no connexion. It is, therefore, incorrect to substitute it as an equivalent for z, or vice versa. When it occupies the place of the Anglo-Saxon letter, no other character represents its exact force.

(2) Hymn to the Virgin, time of Henry III.

Blessed beo thu, lavedi, ful of hovene blisse,
Swete flur of parais,
moder of milternisse;
Thu praye Jhesu Crist thi sone,
that he me i-wisse,
Thare a londe al swo ihc beo,
that he me ne i-misse.

Of the, faire lavedi, min oreisun
ich wile biginnen!
Thi deore swete sunnes love
thu lere me to winnen.
Wel ofte ich sike and sorwe make,
ne mai ich nevere blinnen,
Bote thu, thruh thin milde mod, bringe me out of sunne.

Ofte ihc seke merci, thin swete name ich calle
Mi flehs is foul, this world is fals, thu loke that ich ne falle.
Lavedi freo, thu schild me
fram the pine of helle!
And send me into that blisse that tunge ne mai tellen

Mine werkes, lavedi, heo makieth me ful won;
Wel ofte ich clepie and calle, thu i-her me for than.
Bote ic chabbe the help of the,
other I ne kan;
Help thu me, ful wel thu mist,
thu helpest moni a man.

I-blessed beo thu, lavedi,
so fair and so briht,
Al min hope is uppon the bi dai and bi nicht.
Helpe, thruh thin milde mode,
for wel wel thu mist,
That ich nevere for feondes sake fur-go thin eche liht.

Briht and scene quen of hovene,
ich bidde thin sunnes hore;
The sunnes that ich habbe i-cun,
heo rewweth me ful sore.
Wel ofte ich chabbe the fur-saken,
the wil ich never eft more:
Lavedi, for thine sake, treuthen feondes lore.

I-blessed beo thu, lavedi,
so feir and so hende;
Thu praie Jhesu Crist thi sone,
that he me i-sende,
Whare a londe al swo ich beo,
er ich honne wende,
That ich mote in parais wonien withuten ende.

Bricht and scene quen of storre,
so me liht and lere,
In this false fikele world
so me led and steore,
That ich at min ende dai
ne habbe non feond to fere;
Jhesu, mit ti swete blod, thu bohtest me ful dere.

Jhesu, seinte Marie sone, thu i her thin moder bone;
To the ne dar I clepien noht,
to hire ich make min mene;
Thu do that ich for hire sake
beo i-maked so clene,
That ich noht at dai of dome
beo flemed of thin exsene

MS. Egerton 613, Reliq. Antiq. i. 102-3.

(3) From the Harrowing of Hell, MS. Digby 86, time of Edward I.

Hou Jhesu Crist herowede helle,
Of harde gates ich wille telle.
Leve frend, nou beth stille,
Lesteth that ich tellen wille,
Ou Jhesu fader him bithoute,
And Adam hout of helle broute.
In helle was Adam and Eve,
That weren Jhesu Crist wel leve;
And Seint Johan the Baptist,
That was newen Jhesu Crist;
Davit the prophete and Abraham
For the sunnes of Adem;
And moni other holi mon,
Mo then ich ou tellen con;
Till Jhesu fader nom fles and blod
Of the maiden Marie god,
And suth then was don ful michel some,
Bonden and beten and maked ful lome,
Tille that Gode Friday at non,
Thenne he was on rode i-don,
His honden from his body wonden,
Nit here miȝte hoe him shenden.
To helle sone he nom gate
Adam and Eve hout to take:
Tho the he to helle cam,
Suche wordes he bigan.

(4) From 'Cokaygne,' a poem written very early in the fourteenth century.

Ther is a wel fair abbei,
Of white monkes, and of grei,
Ther beth bowris and halles:
Al of pasteiis beth the walles,
Of fleis, of fisse, and rich met,
The likfullist that man mai et
Fluren cakes beth the schingles alle,
Of cherche, cloister, boure and halle.
The pinnes beth fat podinges,
Rich met to princez and kinges.
Ther is a cloister fair and liȝt,
Brod and lang, of sembli siȝt.
The pilers of that cloister alle
Beth i-turned of cristale,
With harlas and capitale
Of grene iaspe and rede corale.
In the praer is a tre
Swithe likful for to se,
The rote is gingevir and galingale
The siouns beth al sedwale.
Trie maces beth the flure,
The rind canel of swet odur:
The frute gilofre of gode smakke,
Of cucubes ther nis no lakke.

MS. Harl. 913, f. 4

(5) From the Proverbs of Hendyng, MS. Harl. 2253, time of Edward II.

Mon that wol of wysdam heren,
At wyse Hendyng he may lernen,
That wes Marcolves sone;
Gode thonkes ant monie thewes
For te teche fele shrewes,
For that wes ever is wone.
Jhesu Crist, al folkes red,
That for us alle tholede ded
Upon the rode tre,
Lene us alle to ben wys,
Ant to ende in his servys!
Amen, par charité!
'God biginning maketh god endyng,'
Quoth Hendyng.

Wyt ant wysdom lurneth ȝerne,
Ant loke that none other werne
To be wys ant hende;
For betere were to bue wis,
Then for te where feh ant grys,
Wher so mon shal ende.
'Wyt ant wysdom is god warysoun,'
Quoth Hendyng.

Ne may no mon that is in londe,
For nothyng that he con fonde,
Wonen at home ant spede;
So fele thewes for te leorne,
Ase he that hath y-sotht ȝeorne
In wel fele theode.
'Ase fele thede, ase fele thewes;'
Quoth Hendyng.

(6) The Creed, from a MS. written in the reign of Edward III.

I byleve in God, fader almyȝthi, maker of hevene and of erthe, and in Jhesu Crist, the sone of hym only oure lord, the wuche is consceyved of the holy gost, y-boren of Marie mayden, suffrede passioun under Pounce Pilate, y-crucified, ded, and buried, wente doun in to helle, the thridde day he roos from dethe, he steyet up to hevenes, he sitteth on the riȝt syde of God the fadur almyȝti, thennes he is to come to deme the queke and the dede. I byleve in the holy gost, holy chirche general, the comunyng of halewes, the forȝefenesse of synnes, the rysyng of flech, and the lyf whit-oute ende. Amen.

(7) From a poem on blood-letting, written about A.D. 1380.

Maystris that uthyth blode letyng,
And therwyth giteth ȝowr levyng,
Here ȝe may lere wysdom ful gode,
In what place ȝe schulle let blode
In man, woman, and in childe,
For evelys that ben wyk and wilde
Weynis ther ben .xxx.^{ti} and two
That on a man mot ben undo;
.xvj. in the heved ful riȝt,
And .xvj. beneth in ȝow i-pyȝt.

In what place thay schal be founde,
I schal ȝow telle in a stounde.
Besydis the ere ther ben two,
That on a man mot ben undo
To kepe hys heved fro evyl turnyng,
And fro the scalle, wythout lesyng.
Two at the templys thay mot blede
For stoppynge of kynde, as I rede.
And on is in the mydde for-hevede,
For lepre sausfleme mot blede.
Abowe the nose thare is on,
For fuethynge mot be undon.
And also whan eyhen ben sore,
And for resyng gout everemore.
Two they ben at the eyhen ende,
Whan they beth bleryt for to amende,
And for that cometh of smokynge,
I wol tel yow no lesynge,
At the holle of the ȝrot ther ben two,
That for lepre and streyt breyt mot be undo.
In the lyppys .iiij. ther ben gode to bledene,
As I yow telle now bydene,
Two by the eyhen abowen also,
I telle yow there ben two
For sor of tho mowthe to blede,
What hyt is I fynde as I rede.
Two under the tongue wythout lese
Mot blede for the squynase;
And whan the townge is akynge
Throȝt eny maner swollynge.

(8) From an astrological MS. written about the year 1400.

Man born wile the sonne is in Cankyr, that is the xiiij. day in Jun tyl the xiij. day in Jul, xxx. day. is whit colorid, femynin herte; but he be born the owr of Mars or of Sol or of Jupiter, man bold and hardy, and sly inowh to falshede and tresowne, fayr spekere and evil spekere, and suptyl and wily and fals, broken in arm or in fase, desese in cheyl or nere, mekyl wytty and mikyl onwis and onkynde, and fals in fele thingis in word and dede; shrewe to woordin wyth, hatyd of fele and of wol fewe lowyd; a womman schal make him to sinne; he schal lovin a woman brown of complexown and of bettur blod than is hymself; he schal lovin no man but for hiis owne profyt.

(9) A song, temp. Henry VI.

What so mene seyne,
Love is no peyne
To theme serteyne
  Butt varians;
For they constreyne
Ther hertes to feyne,
Ther mowthis to pleyne
  Ther displesauns.
Whych is in dede
Butt feynyd drede,
So God me spede!
  And dowbilnys.
Ther othis to bede,
Ther lyvys to lede,
And proferith mede
  New-fangellenys.
For whenne they pray,
Ye shalle have nay,
What so they say,
  Beware, for shame.
For every daye
They waite ther pray,
Wher so they may,
  And make butt game
Thenne semyth me
Ye may welle se
They be so fre
  In evyry plase:
Hitt were peté
Butt they shold be Bogelid, perdé,
  Withowtyne grase.

MS. Cantab. Ff i. 6, f. 45.

(10) Extract from the Romance of Sir Perceval, written about 1440.

Thofe he were of no pryde,
Forthirmore ganne he glyde
Tille a chambir ther besyde,
  Moo sellys to see;
Riche clothes fande he sprede,
A lady slepande on a bedde,
He said, "Forsothe, a tokyne to wedde
  Salle thou lefe with mee."
Ther he kyste that swete thynge,
Of hir fynger he tuke a rynge,
His awenne modir takynnynge
  He lefte with that fre.
He went forthe to his mere,
Tuke with hym his schorte spere
Lepe one lofte as he was ere,
  His way rydes he
Now on his way rydes he,
Moo selles to see;
A knyghte wolde he nedis bee
  Withowttene any bade.
He come ther the kyng was Servede of the firste mese,
To hym was the maste has
  That the childe hade;
And thare made he no lett
At ȝate, dore ne wykett,
Bot in graythely he gett,
  Syche maistres he made!
At his first in comynge,
His mere withowttene faylynge
Kyste the forhevede of the kynge
  So nerehande he rade!
The kyng had ferly thaa,
And up his hande ganne he taa,
And putt it forthir hym fraa
  The mouthe of the mere.
He saide, "Faire childe and free,
Stonde stille besyde mee,
And telle me wythene that thou bee,
  And what thou wille here."
Thanne saide the fole of the filde,
"I ame myne awnne modirs childe
Comene fro the woddez wylde
  Tille Arthure the dere;
Ȝisterday saw I knyghtis three,
Siche one salle thou make mee
On this mere by-for the,
  Thi mete or thou schere!"

(11) From MS. Porkington 10, written in the reign of Edward IV.

God that dyed for us alle,
And dranke bothe eysell and galle,
  He bryng us alle oute off bale;
And gyve hym good lyve and long,
That woll attend to my song,
  And herkyne on to my talle.

Ther dwelyd a man in my contré,
The wyche hade wyvys thre
  Yn proses of certyn tyme;
Be hys fyrst wyffe a chyld he had,
The wyche was a propyr lad
  And ryght an happy hynd:
And his fader lovyd hym ryght welle,
Hys steppe-dame lovyd hyme never a delle,
  I telle ȝowe as y thynke;
She thoght hyt lost be the rode
Alle that ever dyd hyme good,
  Off mette other of drynke:
Not halfe ynowe thereof he had,
And ȝyt in faythe hit was fulle bad,
  And alle hyr thoght yt lost.
Y pray God evyll mot sche fare,
For oft sche dyde hym moche care,
  As far forthe as sche durst!
She good wyffe to hyr husbond yone say,
For to put away thys boy
  Y hold yt for the beste;
In fayth he hys a lether lade,
Y wold som other man hym had,
  That beter myȝt hym chaste.
Than anone spake the good man,
And to hys wyff sayd he than,
  He ys but ȝong of age,
He schall be with us lenger,
Tyll that he be strenger,
  To wyn beter wage.
We have a mane a strong freke,
The wyche one fyld kypythe owr nette,
  And slepyth half the day;
He schall come home be Mary myld,
And to the fylde schalle go the chyld,
  And kepe hem ȝyfe he may

(12) A letter, temp. Henry VIII.

Ryghte honorable and my syngular goode lord and mayster, all circumstauncys and thankes sett aside, pleasithe yt youre good lordeshipe to be advertisid, that where I was constitute and made by youre honorable desire and commaundmente commissarie generall of the dyosese of Saynte Assaph, I have done my dylygens and dutie for the expulsinge and takynge awaye of certen abusions, supersticions, and ipocryses usid within the saide diosece of Saynte Assaph, acordynge to the kynges honorable actes and injunctions therin made. That notwithstondinge, there ys an image of Darvellgadarn within the saide diosese, in whome the people have so greate confidence, hope, and truste, that they cumme daylye a pillgramage unto hym, somme withe kyne, other with oxen or horsis, and the reste withe money, insomuche that there was fyve or syxe hundrethe pillgrames, to a mans estimacion, that offered to the saide image the fifte daie of this presente monethe of Aprill. The innocente people hathe ben sore aluryd and entisid to worshipe the saide image, insomuche that there is a commyn sayinge as ye amongist them that whosoever will offer anie thinge to the saide image of Davellgadarn he hathe power to fatche hym or them that so offers oute of hell when they be dampned. Therfore, for the reformacion and amendmente of the premisses, I wolde gladlie knowe by this berer youre honorable pleasure and will, as knowithe God, who ever preserve your lordeshipe longe in welthe and honor. Writen in Northe Wales, the vj. daye of this presente Aprill.
